— f. eating, a. [Colloq., U. S.] Pertaining to or having the spirit of a fire-eater.— f. edger, n. A thin fire-tempered edge of a blade or weapon. 2. Hence, an ardent disposition.— f. escape, n. A ladder, chute, or other device for enabling persons to leave or be taken from a burning building.— f. extinguisher, n. An apparatus for putting out a fire in its early stages. A common form contains a small vessel filled with a mineral acid, which, by coming into contact with a solution of a bicarbonate, generates carbon dioxid. This gas, mixed with the water of the solution, is then thrown on the fire through a hose, by its own pressure.— electric fire-extinguisher, a device for turning water or carbon dioxid on a fire, when the temperature in an apartment reaches any dangerous or combustible heat, by means of a thermostat completing an electric circuit.— f. eyes, n. A South-American anteater-finch (Geospiza leucopteva), having red eyes.— f. eyed, a. [Poet.] Having eyes of or like fire.— f. fan, n. 1. A portable forge-blast. 2. A Malay palmet-fan designed for fanning open fires. 3†. A fire-screen to be held in the hand.— f. fanged, a. 1. Having a baked or dried-up appearance: specif., said (1) of mummies that have been exposed during the decomposition, or (2) of cheese swollen or cracked by being heated too much in drying.— f. feeder, n. A device for feeding a furnace fire.— f. fiend, n. 1. Destructive fire personified. 2. [Colloq.] An incendiary.— f. finch, n. Same as f. bird, 1.— f. finch, n. A weaver-bird of the genus Ruplectes.— fire'-fish', n. One of various East-Indian red scorpænoid fishes of the genus Pterois with long pectoral and ventral fins.— f. fishing, n. Fishing at night by aid of torches or a fire carried in a boat and used to attract the fish; torch-fishing; jacking.— f. flaire or f. flare, or f. fleet, n. A flash of lightning.— f. flaw, n. A flaw regarded as a signal of the use of fire.— fire'flame", n. The red bandfish (Cepola rubescens).— fire'flare", n. [Prov. Eng.] The European stingray (Dasyatis pastinaca).— fire'fly', n. [Colloq., U. S.] Same as f. light, n. [Scot.] 1. A flash of lightning, particularly heat-lightning. 2. The aurora borealis.— f. flaucht', — fire'flirt', n. [Local, Eng.] The redstart.— f. fork, n. A forklike implement for heaping fagots on a fire.— f. free', a. Proof against fire.— f. gilding, n. Gilding with an amalgam of gold and mercury, from which, when it is heated, the mercury volatilizes, leaving a thin layer of gold.— f. gilt, a. Gilded by the fire-gilding process; as, a firegilt frame.— f. god, n. Fire personified as a god or spirit; the god of fire.— f. grass, n. Same as f. weed.— f. grate, n. The grate of a fireplace, furnace, heater, etc.— f. grenade, n. A hand-grenade.— f. guard, n. 1. A fender. 2. Same as FIRE-BREAK.— f. hanghird, the Baltimore oriole.— f. hearth, n. A cooking-range or stove; a kitchen.— f. hook, n. A perforated metal case for carrying a slow-burning fuse, formerly used by gunners.— f. hole, n. 1. The hole or pit in which navigators kindle their fire for heating purposes. 2. In arctic travel, a hole in the ice from which to draw water in case of fire. 3. pl.†.

We pass on water from the firehole alongside.

1. Steam fire-engine with tractor. 2. Horse-drawn steam fire-engine: (1) Engine truck platform; (2) Water-tank; (3) Brake foot-lever; (4) Frame; (5) Suction-pipe; (6) Tool-box; (7) Driver's seat; (8) Vacuum-chamber; (9) Lantern; (10) Air-chamber; (11) Compound gage; (12) Oil-pump; (13) Steam-cylinder; (14) Exhaust-pipe; (15) Lubricator; (16) Bell; (17) Throttle; (18) Whistle; (19) Dome; (20) Smoke-stack; (21) Gage-cock; (22) Water-gage; (23) Water-pressure gage; (24) Steam-gage; (25) Blower-valve; (26) Feed-pump; (27) Brake-lever fulcrum; (28) Tool-box; (29) Suction-extension; (30) Brand-brake; (31) Hydrant-chuck; (32) Fuel-pan; (33) Blowoff-cock; (34) Piston-rod; (35) Cross-head; (36) Water-cylinder; (37) Balance-wheel; (38) Relief-valve; (39) Hose-train valve; (40) Discharge-gate; (41) Water-leg. 3. Wall-cabinet for fire-rack and hose. 4 & 5. Trumpets, parade and duty. 6. Goggles and respirator as worn. 7. Rubber cap with cape. 8. Extension-ladder on a truck. 9. Hose-spanner. 10. Crowbar. 11. Play-pipe. 12. Hatchet and pick. 13. Sledge. 14. Fireman's service helmet. 15. Life-line gun. 16. Three-horse hitch. 17. Village swanneck fire-engine. 18. Tin-roof cutter. 20. Hook. 21. Watch-room showing annunciator-cabinet. 22. Wall fire-extinguisher. 23. Wire-cutter. 24. Double-cylinder chemical fire-engine. 25. Plaster-hook and Wall-cutter. 26. Fire-buckets. 27. Wall-cutter. 28. Hand-grenades. 29. Motor water-tower. 30 & 32. Hand fire-pumps. 31. Warehouse chemical engine. 33. Life-net. 34. Motor fire-engine: (1) Discharger-pipe; (2) Air-chamber; (3) Lantern; (4) Fire-pump; (5) Pressure- and vacuum-gages; (6) Driver's seat; (7) Bulb; (8) Steering-wheel; (9) Steering-column; (10) Lamp; (11) Search-light; (12) Bell; (13) Lamp; (14) Dash; (15) Hood; (16) Radiator filling-pipe; (17) Radiator; (18) Lamps; (19) Inspection cover; (20) Strainer; (21) Horn; (22) Play-pipe; (23) Clutch-pedal; (24) Brake-pedal; (25) Emergency-lever; (26) Gear-shift lever; (27) Suction-hose; (28) Water-gages; (29) Driving-chain; (30) Discharge-gate; (31) Suction-hose connection; (32) Step; (33) Tail-lamp. 35. Combination motor fire-engine and hose-cart.

an enemy's ship or fleet.— f. raising, n. [Scot.] A setting on fire; arson.— f.-red, a. Red as fire.— f.-red, n. [Brit. Guiana.] The pigmy seed-eater (Sporophila minuta), a small brilliant fringilline song-bird of brushy places.— f.-reel, n. A reel or spool on which a fire-hose is coiled: either detached or mounted on a cart.— f.-regulator, n. An automatic device for controlling combustion, as in a steam-heating apparatus, by opening or closing a damper on a fire-door, according to the pressure of the steam or the temperature of the heated air.— f.-risk, n. 1. The possible loss of property by fire. 2. The risk incurred by a fire insurance company in taking a policy. 3. A piece of property insured against fire.— f.-roll, n. Naut. The roll of a drum, or, in the United States navy, the rapid ringing of the ship's bell, summoning men to their quarters.— f.-room, n. The boiler-room on a steamship, where the firing of the furnace is done; stoke-hole.— f. salamander, n. The common spotted salamander (Salamandra maculosa) of Europe: in allusion to an ancient fable.— f.-saw, n. A thin strip of wood or bamboo drawn rapidly, saw-fashion, across a concave block of the same material, for producing fire by friction. The spark appears beneath.— f.-screen, n. 1. Any screen used to protect from the heat of a fire, or from flying sparks. 2. A fire-guard of baize or flannel in the passenger-car from an open powder-magazine.— f.-set, n. A set of fire-tools, consisting of shovel, poker, and tongs, with the holder.— f.-setting, n. A former method of cracking a working-face in a mine by building a fire against it and then rapidly cooling with cold water.— f.-shield, n. A fire-guard of sheet metal or asbestos, to protect workmen at a furnace or bremen at a fire from the intense heat.— f.-ship, n. A ship fitted with combustibles, fired and floated toward an enemy for the purpose of destroying ships, bridges, etc.— f.-shovel, n. A shovel used in the management of a fire.— f.-silvering, n. Plating with silver by applying silver amalgam or a mixture containing finely reduced silver, and, in either case, fixing the silver by heating, as in a muffle.— f.-slash, n. A gap in a forest caused by fire.— f.-spirit, n. Fire personified as a spirit.— f.-spot, n. Archeol. A bowl-shaped fireplace in the ground containing ashes, calcined bones, etc., common in Scandinavian countries: sometimes supposed to be a vestige of funeral pyres.— f.-spots, n. pl. Flame-colored specks in the iris of the eye.— f.-steel, n. A piece of steel to use with a flint in striking fire.— f.-stick, n. 1. A firebrand or lighted stick: a burning piece of wood. 2. Any form of hard dry stick used to obtain fire by friction, as a fire-drill.— f.-stink, n. The odor evolved by decomposing iron pyrites.— f.-stone, n. 1. Flint or pyrites used for striking fire. 2. A stone that will withstand the action of fire. 3. A composition of niter, sulfur, resin, etc., used for charging incendiary shells. 4. Metal. An infusible stone covering the furnace-front of a slag-hearth to within a few inches of the bedplate.— f.-stop, n. 1. A fire-bridge. 2. Any incombustible material used to fill in open parts of a building in order to prevent the passage of fire.— f.-surface, n. That part of the surface of a boiler which is exposed to the fire; the heating-surface.— f.-swab, n. A swab of rope-yarn, moistened and inserted in a cannon to remove or put out any glowing particles.— f.-syringe, n. A philosophical toy consisting of a closed cylinder in which tinder may be ignited by the compression of air caused by forcing in a piston. A similar instrument was formerly used practically by the Polynesians.— fire'tail', n. 1. The redstart. 2. A cuckoo-fly, or chrysalid hymenopter.— f.-tailed, a. Having a tail in color suggesting fire. See COMET.— f.-teaser, n. [Slang, Eng.] A stoker.— f.-telegraph, n. 1. A telegraphic fire-alarm system. 2. A system of beacon-fires for transmitting intelligence.— f.-tidle, n. A device used in a furnace, which is unaffected by great heat.— f.-tongs, n. Tongs for use about a fireplace.— fire'top', n. Same as FIREWORK.— f.-tower, n. A lighthouse. 2. A watch-tower from which a conflagration can be seen and an alarm given.— f.-trace, n. Same as FIRE-BREAK.— f.-trap, n. A building notoriously inflammable, or one not provided with an escape for use in case of fire.— f.-tree, n. Bot. Any one of various trees, so called from their free like appearance when in flower, especially the pohutukawa (Metrosideros tomentosa), of the myrtle family of New Zealand, and the Australian flame-tree (Nuytsia floribunda), of the mistletoe family, or the Queensland tulip-tree.— f.-tube, n. In steam-boilers, a tube, usually one of many, for the passage of combustion-gases; a flue.— f.-walk, n. 1. A medieval ordeal in which a suspected person walked through fire. 2. A quasi-religious ceremony in which devotees walk barefooted on a red-hot bed of charcoal, a custom now practically extinct in Polynesia, but still prevailing in India. The fire-walkers usually pass through the ordeal unscathed. The writer has performed the Dasadhe at the annual worship of their god Rahu, who is believed to cause eclipses. In northern India Hindus walk through the Holi fire and in southern India perform the ordeal in honor of Saint Madar. fire-walking!.— f.-wall, n. A thick wall to check fire.— f.-warden, n. An officer who has charge of the prevention and extinguishing of fires. f.-ward!.— f.-water, n. U. S. Whiskey or spirits used by or attributed to the North-American Indians.— f.-well, n. A spring of inflammable gas.— f.-wood, n. Wood used, or fit to use, as fuel.— f.-work, n. 1. An officer of artillery.— f.-worm, n. 1. A glowworm. 2. The larva of a tortricid moth, which devours the leaves of the cranberry, large numbers sometimes forcing f., a conflagration caused in heavily wooded land, as by sparks from locomotives, etc.: frequent in the United States in March, April, and May, or in the summer, after long periods of drought. They are classified as (1) surface or ground fires, a burning of the litter of soil-covering, leaves, grass, etc.; (2) crown fires, attacking the foliage and upper branches; (3) ground fires, subterranean examples occurring in isolated hollow trees; and (4) deep soil-fires, the comparatively rare fires occurring in peaty moorlands, which can only be stopped by digging down to the mineral soil.— Greek f., an incendiary composition used by the Byzantine Greeks: supposed to have been made of asphalt, saltpeter, and sulfur. It would burn on and under the water.— Holy f. (Myst.), discharge at a height or angle of more than 30°.— hollow f., a furnace used in tin-plate manufacture for heating iron and preserving it from contamination by fuel and sulfur.— holy f. (R. C. Ch.), a flint-made fire kindled on Holy Saturday, and used to relight the church lights quenched on Good Friday.— horizontal f., artillery fire delivered with little or no elevation.— letters of f. and sword (Old Scots Law), letters from the Privy Council by which the sheriff could invoke the assistance of the country in ejecting a tenant.— liquid f., a flaming liquid, as oil accompanied by dense smoke ejected through a nozzled apparatus borne on the back of a flame-thrower (Ger. flammenwerfer) used by the German army during the Great War (1914–18).— marsh-f., n. The ignis fatuus.— on f., burning; ablaze (literally or figuratively).— open f. 1. An exposed forge-fire as distinguished from one that is covered: made in the central hollow of the earth of a forge, with tuyère commonly water-jacketed. 2. A fire in an open fireplace, as a grate, as distinguished from one in a stove.— out of the frying-pan into the f., from bad to worse.— plunging f., artillery fire delivered when the object of aim is below the level of the piece: a term used by Leonardo da Vinci according to Hamilton and others, fire out of which the universe was formed.— raking f., firing that passes lengthwise of a vessel.— red f., see COLORED FIRE.— ricochet f., artillery fire delivered against the crest of a parapet or of a body of troops.— ricochet or rolling f., artillery fire delivered with the axis of the piece nearly parallel with the ground, so as to cause ricocheting.— running f., rapid discharge of firearms in succession along a line of troops, or a constant fire of musketry or cannon.— St. Anthony's f., erysipelas.— St. Francis's f., erysipelas.— St. John's f., a bonfire lighted on Midsummer night (June 24) in certain parts of Europe: originally meant to drive off the evil spirits of disease and deformity.— slant f., artillery fire in which the shot strikes the interior slope of a parapet, forming with it a horizontal angle not greater than 30°.— to go through f., or through f. and water, to pass through a severe trial; undergo extreme risk.— to play with f., to trifle gaily or ignorantly with matters likely to cause trouble or suffering.— to pour oil on the f., to make worse matters that are already bad; add fuel to the flames.— to set on f., to kindle; inflame (literally or figuratively).— to set the river on f., to do some remarkable or surprising thing; commonly used with a negative, to imply slowness or stupidity: as, he'll never set the river on fire. The most probable explanation of this phrase attributes it to an expression as to setting the river Thames on fire, which in its turn was a corruption or misunderstanding of a proverb concerning a slow workman who would not move the toms (a corn-sieve) fast enough to heat it.— to strike f., to strike a match or make a spark by concussion.— to take f., to begin to burn; become inflamed (literally or figuratively).— under f., exposed to gunshot or artillery fire.— vertical f., same as CURVED FIRE.

fire'arm', 1 fair'ärm"; 2 fīr'ärm", n. Any weapon from which a missile, as a bullet, ball, or shell, is handed by an explosive, as gunpowder. See list under GUN.

fire department. That part of the public service which includes the buildings, fire-extinguishing apparatus, and men devoted to the prevention and extinction of fires.

In the United States the fire departments are, as a rule, much larger in proportion to the population of the cities they protect than is the case in Europe, owing to the fact that fires are much more frequent. These are undoubtedly due to the large percentage of frame buildings in the American cities, at least two-thirds of the fire losses being traceable to this cause. The average annual fire loss per capita in the United States is $2.67, while that of a number of the larger European cities in six countries is $0.53. The annual expense of maintaining the fire departments in American cities averages $1.53 per capita, while in London it is $0.19, in Paris $0.21, and in Berlin $0.31. The American fire departments are generally conceded, however, to be the best-organized and -trained bodies of their kind in the world, largely owing to the fact that they are so much more frequently called into action. Early fire-brigades, both in England and the United States, were composed of volunteers who were in some cases exempt from jury duty in return for their services. These have gradually merged into paid fire departments as the need for such establishments became apparent. The New York and London fire departments are both organizations of long standing. That of London was founded in 1832, as an amalgamation of the different independent companies, with 80 men and 19 stations, under the name of the "London Fire-engine Establishment." In 1865 a regular fire-brigade was established by the Metropolitan Fire-brigade Act. Under the direction of Captain (afterward Sir) Eyre Shaw (1861–1891) it developed into a highly efficient and serviceable body. Its title was changed in 1904 to the "London Fire-brigade." In New York the paid fire department was organized May 4, 1865, since which time the system has attained wonderful efficiency and has spread to all the large cities of the country, under the control of fire commissioners. International congresses are held from time to time, in which the fire fighters of the world meet so as to consider the best methods for the prevention of fires, exhibit the latest apparatus for combating them, etc. These have resulted in a high degree of perfection in the profession, and have tended to the great reduction of fire losses and the saving of many lives. The table given below presents a few facts about the fire departments of the leading cities of the world.

fire'drake", 1 fair'drēk"; 2 fīr'drāk", n. 1. A meteor; an ignis fatuus. 2. A sort of firework. 3†. One who works at a furnace. 4†. A dragon or fiery serpent. [< AS. fyrdraca, < fyr, fire, + draca; see DRAKE, n.]

fire'-engine, 1 fair'-en"jin; 2 fīr'-en"jin, n. A machine for pumping water through hose, to extinguish fires.

The steam fire-engine is the most common form, consisting of a force-pump operated by a steam-engine, and mounted on wheels. The draft made by drawing the fire rapidly and full speed causes the previously heated water to make steam rapidly, so that the engine can be in operation within a very few minutes after the fire is lighted. The chemical fire engine is a light apparatus mounted on wheels and operating on the principles of a fire-extinguisher. The hand fire-engine, now in disuse, was a force-pump mounted on wheels and operated by levers worked by hand.

fire'fly", 1 fair'flai"; 2 fīr'flī", n. 1. An insect capable of emitting light from some part of the body, especially a lampyrid beetle, as of the genera Photuris, Photinus, Phingodes, etc., or an elaterid (genus Pyrophorus) of the warmer parts of America. The common North-American fireflies or lightning-bugs of the genus Photuris, as P. pennsylvanica, have photogenic glands in the last abdominal segments, both sexes winged, and luminous larvæ. While the light emitted by the firefly is apparently phosphorescent, it has now been demonstrated that phosphorus has no part in its production. Photogenic substances seemingly exist in the cells of the luminous organs and may be in the nature of fats. These cells, under the control of the nervous system, secrete a substance which undergoes combustion, while the light shines, by combination with the oxygen conveyed to them by the numerous capillary vessels of the luminous body. The use to the firefly of the light has not been definitely determined, but it is probably either sexual or defensive.

LONGFELLOW Hiawatha pt. iii, st. 12.

2. One of various neuropterous and pseudoneuropterous insects, as Chauliodes pectinicornis and Perla dorsata.— fire'fly'-lamp", n. In tropical America, a cage in which fireflies are confined to give light.

fire'-fork', f.-gilding, f. hangbird, etc. See under FIRE, n.

Fire Island. A long sand-beach on the south shore of Long Island, N. Y., separating Great South Bay from the ocean: a summer resort, and the site of a first-class lighthouse, the first seen by transatlantic voyagers approaching the harbor of New York.

fire'less, 1 fair'les; 2 fīr'lĕs, a. Having no fire.

fire'light", 1 fair'lait"; 2 fīr'līt", n. 1. Light from a fire, especially from an open fire.

They were the strangest men . . . that ever firelight shone upon.
DICKENS Dombey and Son p. 131. [n. d. & l. 1886.]

2. A fire-lighter.

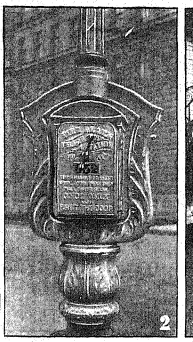
fire'lock', 1 fair'lok"; 2 fīr'lŏk", n. An old form of musket discharged by any device for producing sparks by friction or concussion; specif., a flintlock, as distinguished from a matchlock.



The musical plain of the Shannon was covered with firelocks and grenades which the fugitives had thrown away.
MACAULAY England vol. iv, p. 79. [r. s. & co. 1856.]

fire'man, 1 fair'man; 2 fīr'man, n. [-MEN, pl.] 1. A member of an organization for extinguishing fires. 2. In the United States navy, one who aids in putting out fires in time of action. 3. A fire-tender; a stoker. 4. One who makes examination for fire-damp in a mine.

fire'man'ship, f.-net, etc. See under FIRE, n.

Fi-ren'ze, 1 fi-ren'tsē; 2 fi-rĕn'tsē, n. [It.] 1. A province of Italy, part of old Tuscany; 2,205 sq. m. 2. Its capital, the city of Florence.

fire'-phi-los'o-phers, 1 fair'-fi-los'o-fərz; 2 fir'-fi-lŏs'o-fe s, n. pl. A fanatical sect of philosophers, who appeared in Europe (16th century), holding that the intimate essences of natural things were to be known only by a chemical or fire test. They are sometimes associated with Paracelsus.

fire'-spike", n. See under FIRE, n.

fire'place", 1 fair'plēs; 2 fir'plāc", n. A recess or structure in or on which a fire is built; especially, the part of a chimney that opens into a room.

It is a good thing to have an old-fashioned fire-place in the country; a broad-breasted, deep-hearted chimney-piece.

F. S. COZZENS, Sparrowgrass Papers, p. 76. (c. n. 1863.)

fire'-proof", 1 fair'-prūf"; 2 fir'-prōf", a. Made proof against fire; relatively incombustible; also, of a nature to protect from fire; as, fire-proof walls; fire-proof paint. The term fire-proof is frequently applied to materials or structures which are slow-burning and comparatively hard to ignite, but which are susceptible of destruction by fire if sufficient heat be brought to bear upon them for long periods of time. As applied to buildings, safes, vaults, etc., in modern parlance it represents a partial immunization from the effects of an ordinary fire. Combustible materials, such as textile fabrics and wood, may be rendered wholly or partly fire-proof by coating them with certain chemical preparations which provide a mineral crust that resists the action of the fire but does not prevent decomposition. Cotton and linen may be immersed in any saline solution, such as alum, borax, sodium tungstate, etc., while timber is rendered fire proof by impregnation with zinc sulfate, calcium chlorid, etc., or by painting it with preparations containing soluble silicate or zinc chlorid.—fire'proof", v. To render fire-proof.—fire'proof'ing, n. 1. The act or process of rendering fire-proof. 2. Material used for fire-proofing purposes.

fir'er, 1 fair'ər; 2 fir'er, n. 1. One who kindles fires; also, an incendiary. 2. A stoker.

fire'side", 1 fair'sēid"; 2 fir'sīd", n. The hearth or space about the fireplace; hence, the place of family cheer and home comfort: used also attributively; as, fireside tales.

The fireside is the earliest and most influential of schools.

MARTEN Wendell Phillips p. 25. (c. n. v. 1890.)

fi-re'ro, 1 fi-rē'mō; 2 fi-rē'mo, n. Logic. Festino with premises transposed.

fire'-trench", n. Mil. A first-line trench or trench on the firing-line.

fire'-tug, 1 fair'vēd"; 2 fir'wēd", n. Bot. 1. A coarse annual plant (Erechtites hieraciifolia) of the aster family. 2. The common willow-herb. 3. The wild lettuce. 4. The thorn-apple, jimson, or Jamestown weed. 5. The hoary plantain. 6. The Canada fleabane. 7. Ragweed.

fire'work", 1 fair'wŭrk"; 2 fir'wŭrk", n. 1. Any device consisting of a case of pasteboard, paper, or the like, containing combustibles and explosives, such as niter, charcoal, and sulfur, and producing colored or white light or pyrotechnic illusions in burning: commonly in the plural.

Fireworks are used (1) for pleasure or display, through beautiful effects and designs in brilliant or colored fires, as rockets, Roman candles, and set pieces; (2) for signals, as blue-lights and rockets; (3) for illumination, as blue-lights and fire-balls; (4) in war, as projectile rockets and petards and to illuminate the field at night; (5) for insect-destroying diary purposes, as carcasses; (6) in the life-saving service, as rockets for carrying a line. See PYROTECHNICS; ROCKET.

2. pl. A pyrotechnic display. 3†. Work done by fire.

fire'-work'er, etc. See under FIRE, n.

fire'-wor"ship, 1 fair'-wŭr"ship; 2 fir'-wŭr"ship, n. 1. The worship of fire as a god, or as the abode or symbol of a god: often applied to the worship of the Fire-God by Persians or the Parsees. See below. 2. The use of sacred fire in family or public cult, as by the vestal virgins of Rome.

—fire'-wor"ship-er, n. One who worships fire, or who uses fire as a means of worship. Specifically, a follower of Zoroaster, a name strongly objected to by the Zoroastrians, because their supreme deity is not the fire, or Atar, but Ormuzd, the father of Atar, and because the fire is a symbol of the deity and as a sacrificial element. See GHEBER; PARSEE. fire'-wor"ship-per†.

fir'ing, 1 fair'iŋ; 2 fir'ing, n. 1. The act or process of applying fire or intensifying heat to anything, as (1) in stoking; (2) in burning, baking, or vitrifying, as bricks or pottery in a kiln; (3) in lighting and supplying a kiln-fire; (4) in cauterizing; (5) in discharging by fusion on glass or enamel; (6) in curing the leaves of tea.

Come, bring . . . The Christmas log to the firing.

HERRICK Corinna to Christmas st. 1.

2. The discharge of firearms. 3. Fuel, as wood or coal. 4. A scorched appearance, as upon tobacco and corn when injured by excessive rains; scorching. 5. In bell-ringing, a peal of all the bells together. —close firing, same as HEAVY FIRING.—fir'ing-head", n. An explosive box on an oil-well torpedo, by which the torpedo is exploded.—f.-iron, n. 1. A farrier's cauterizing-iron. 2. A stoker's fire-iron, a poker or shovel.—f.-line, n. The line of active engagement in battle; hence, any place of activity and stress. The firing-line is generally construed to be the main body of troops in a battle, as distinguished from those of the enemy, save for a few skirmishers. It is in advance of the remainder of the army which forms its supports and the reserves. Artillery is sometimes considered as being included in it, whatever its position. In modern practise the firing-line always moves in extended order.—f.-order (Engin.), the sequence in which the cylinders of a multiple cylinder internal-combustion engine.—f.-party, n. A military or naval detachment selected to show honor to a deceased person by firing over his grave, or to execute a sentence of death by shooting.—f.-pin, n. A striking pin used to discharge a cartridge. See RIFLE.—f.-point, n. The point of temperature producing spontaneous combustion in an inflammable substance.—f.-proof, a. Of a periodic charging of a furnace with large quantities of fuel: opposed to light firing or open firing. thick f.,—mechanical f., the process of supplying a furnace with fuel by a mechanism.

firk, v. t. & i. 1. To carry or drive away; beat; rouse. 2. To cheat; rob. II. v. t. To fix or operate quickly or suddenly.

firk'er, 1 fĭrk'ər; 2 firk'er, n. 1. One that firks. 2. In LONDON College football, a player who stands facing away from the scrimmage and works the ball out along the wall. firk'ert, fir'kin, 1 fĭr'kin; 2 fir'kin, n. 1. A wooden hooped vessel to hold butter, lard, etc. 2. [Eng.] A measure of capacity, usually one-fourth of a barrel.

The ale and beer firkin is 9 imperial gallons (10.8 U. S. gallons); a firkin of butter is 56 pounds, and a firkin of soap 64 pounds or 8 gallons. Anciently the firkin was much larger; in 1423 it was fixed by statute at 84 gallons.

[< D vier, four, + dim. suf. -kin.]

fir'lot, 1 fĭr'lot; 2 fir'lŏt, n. 1. An old Scottish dry measure, used also on the Isle of Man: from 1 to 1½ bushels. See MEASURE. 2. A vessel holding the equivalent of this measure. [< fir, for FOUR, + LOT, part.]

firm†, v. t. 1. To make firm; establish; confirm; ratify. II. To become firm or solid.—fir-ma'tion†, n.

firm, 1 fĭrm; 2 firm, a. 1. Solidly compacted together; close-knit in texture or fiber; unyielding; solid.

Under spread ensigns, moving nigh, in slow

MILTON Par. Lost, bk. vi, l. 534.

2. Fixedly settled; difficult to move; stable. 3. Full of or indicative of steadiness or strength; not shaky or weak; vigorous; as, a firm tread; a firm look. 4. Steadfast or determined in character; tenaciously confident; true; staunch; enduring; as, firm friend. [< F. ferme, < L. firmus, firm.] firmet. Syn.: close, compact, decided, determined, established, fast, fixed, hard, immovable, immutable, resolute, resolved, secure, sound, stable, stedfast, steady, strong, sturdy, unchanging, unfailing, unfaltering, unshaken. See FAITHFUL; OBSTINATE.—firm'ly, adv.—firm'ness, n. Solidungulous as the horse. f.-hoofed†.—firm'less†, a. Without firmness; unsteady.

firm, n. A union of two or more persons, dissoluble after a specified period or at the will or at the death of one or more of them. The name or style of conducting business; a commercial, industrial, or financial partnership; a business house; also, the style or title under which such a house carries on business; firmenamne; as, the firm of Brown, Jones & Robinson. Under English and American law a firm consists of the individuals composing it, and is not recognized as a legal person apart from them; in Scots and French law, however, the firm is considered as having a distinct personality apart from its members, the individual partners may be sued in proceedings directed against the firm.

It is stated that not one of one hundred firms on Long Wharf in Boston in forty years, only five escaped failure. H. W. CADMAN Christian Life, United Conditions p. 72. (c. n. s. v. 1886.)

Highest or foremost in character, rank, position, or the like; leading; best; as, the first scholar of a class; the first grade.

Sincerity, Thou first of virtues, let no mortal leave
To search thy path! HOME Douglas act i, sc. 1.

[< AS. fyrst, superl. of fore, FORE.]

The prevalent literary usage (almost universal in Great Britain) sanctions the following distinctions: "the two strongest," "the two first," "the two last," etc.; it is nevertheless more discriminating and would be better to say, as many now do say, in accordance with the suggestion of the grammarians, "the last two," etc., when the reference is to the two forms a first pair or group of persons or things, corresponding to or distinguished from a last pair or group. The two first should be used in referring to two persons or things each of which is at the head of its own series, or both of which are foremost in the same class not divided into pairs.

fish[1], n. [FISH or FISH'ES, pl.] 1. A vertebrate animal with gills retained through life, breathing and passing Skeleton of a bony Fish (Teleostome).

Skeleton of a trout: e, eye-socket; br, brain-cavity; ga, branchiostegal rays; io, interoperculum; o, operculum; po, preoperculum; so, suboperculum; ih, interhemals; in, interneurals; r, ribs; d, dorsal fin; c, caudal fin; an, anal fin (d, c, and an are median); a, anus; v, ventral or pelvic fin (when placed far back called abdominal; when far forward of the normal position, thoracic; or, when near the gills, jugular); p, pectoral fin (v and p are paired); f, fin-rays.

Fishes, in the broadest sense, include (1) teleostomes, (2) selachians, (3) marsipobranchs, and (4) leptocardians; but, in a narrower sense, are restricted to gill-bearing vertebrates with complete cranium (teleostomes and selachians), or, still more narrowly, to such of these as have membrane-bones overlying and added to the cranium (teleostomes), popularly called true or bony fishes.

The true Fishes form the second of the six "classes" into which the Craniata are divided . . . their distinctive characters may be concisely stated as follows:—Fresh-water or marine Gnathostomata, which in their shape and in method of breathing are adapted for an aquatic life. Throughout life their respiratory organs are in the form of vascular processes (gills) derived from the walls of the branchial clefts and supported by a series of branchial arches. The principal organ of locomotion is the powerful muscular tail; in addition, however, there are paired fins, pectoral and pelvic, corresponding to the fore- and hind-limbs of the terrestrial Craniata, and possessing a supporting cartilaginous or bony skeleton ('ichthyopterygium') which can not readily be compared with the limb-skeleton of the latter. Fishes also possess a system of median fins, supported by a special skeleton of their own. An exoskeleton of dermal spines or denticles, scales or bony plates, is usually present. Except in one group, the Dipnoi, the heart has but one auricle, and receives only venous blood, which it forces, first, through the blood-vessels of the gills, and thence, as arterial blood, through the vessels of the body generally. An air-bladder is frequently present, and serves as a hydrostatic organ or float, but in a few cases it may act as a lung, and helps the gills in the work of respiration. The paired olfactory organs rarely communicate with the oral cavity by internal nostrils. Peculiar cutaneous sense-organs are disposed in linear tracts along the sides of the body (lateral line sensory organs), and on the head, and appear to be specially associated with a life in water.
T. W. BRIDGE Fishes in Cambridge Natural History vol. vii, p. 148. [MACM. '10.]

fish'i-fy, [fish'i-fi; 2 fish'ĭ-fy, vt. [-FIED; -FY'ING.] To change to fish; render fishy, as a story. [< FISH¹, n., + -FY.]

fish'ing, [fish'iŋ; 2 fish'ing, n. 1. The art, sport, or pursuit of catching fish. 2. A right of or a place for fishing: as, fishings in the sea, rivers, or ponds. 3. (a) Joining rails, etc., with a fish-plate, or (b) of hoisting an anchor to the gunwale or bill-board.—fish'ing-banks", n. Commonly shallow places in the sea where fish abound; specif., the banks of Newfoundland.—f. bill [Slang], a bill in equity based on vague allegations, and drawn for the purpose of seeking information, but subject to dismissal because of faulty drawing.—f.-boat, n.—f.-brig, n. A whaler's spreader sustaining snelled hooks, used in taking river-catfish.—f.-crib, n. Naut. An engine used in seine-fishing.—f.-duck, n. A merganser.—f.-gear, n. 1. The engrey. 2. An East-Indian fish-catching eagle (Polioaëtus ichthyaëtus).—f.-float, n. [U. S.] A scow used in seine-fishing, from which an anyon is let down for the bed stone in the river for more convenient handling of the seine.—f.-fly, n. An artificial fly for fishing.—f.-frog, n. The angler (Lophius piscatorius).—f.-hawk, n. The osprey.—f.-line, n. A line used in catching fish with a hook. 2. Zoöph. A thread-like tentacle employed in capturing food, as in siphonophores.—f.-net, n. A fish-net.—f.-place, n. A place for fishing; specif., in the United States, a described piece of shore on which a seine may be hauled; a pool.—f.-rod, n. 1. A long, slender rod to which the line is attached in angling. 2. [Slang.] The trolley-pole on an electric car.—f.-room, n. [Newfoundland.] A prescribed part of the shore assigned to one proprietor for the curing and storing of fish.—f.-smack, n. A small sloop or other vessel used for fishing.—f.-swivel, n. A swivel at the end of a snood, to permit the hook to be rotated about its shank without tangling the line.—f.-tackle, n. The line, hooks, leads, and other appliances for fishing.—f.-tube, n. A glass tube to lift small objects from the water by drawing them within its lower end; a dipping-tube.—f.-wand, n. [Scot.] A fishing-rod.—f.-weir, n. A fish-weir.—gorge-f., n. Fishing with a bait that the fish is intended to swallow.—great-line f., hand-fishing done at a depth of 60 fathoms and over.—large-line f. [Local, Eng.], fishing with trawl-lines of great length, often 20 miles, now practised only by steam-trawlers.—small-line f. [Local, Eng.], the use of trawl-lines about 65 fathoms long, which are knotted together into a length of about 3 miles, as practised by cable-fishermen.

Fish'kill-on-the-Hud'son, n. A village in Dutchess county, N. Y., on the Hudson river. Fish'kill Landing, 1. A village in Dutchess county, N. Y., on the Hudson river. Fish'kill Landing, 1. A peak in Utah; 11,578 ft. high.

fish'net", [fish'-net"; 2 fish'-nĕt", n. A contrivance wholly or mainly of netting, to catch fish: also, any of various methods.

Fish-nets.

Fish-nets are made in a great variety of sizes, forms, and adaptations, almost every material capable of being woven into or tied into a meshed fabric, but mainly, in modern use, of flax or cotton twine, and of grass. Flat-bottomed landing-nets, S. Minnow-net. dredge, and are fixed, movable, or a part of some general mechanism. They may be classified according to use as follows: (1) entangling nets, those in which the fish are caught by the gills, or other part of the head, including (a) landing nets, as gill-nets, etc., held in a fixed position by stakes or anchors, (b) drift-nets, and (c) pocket-nets, as the trammel; (2) encircling nets, those that capture the fish by enclosing or entrapping them, including (a) seines of all kinds whether hauled or fixed (pounds) and casting-nets, (b) trailing nets, as bunt-nets, (c) purse-nets, (d) lifting nets, as scoop-nets, dip-nets, spillers, and (e) trapping nets of various kinds, as fykes. For particular definitions, see the names cited.

fish'-oil", n. See under FISH¹, n. [Ichthyology.

fish'y, [fish'i; 2 fish'y, a. 1. Suggestive of, pertaining to, or like fish; as, a fishy smell. 2. Abounding in fish; as, a fishy stream. 3. [Colloq.] Of the nature of a fish story; incredible; as, a fishy statement. 4. Vacant of expression; dull; as, a fishy eye. 5. [Slang, Eng.] Worn out; seedy. 6. [Scot.fishermen's Slang.] Having the qualities of a good fisherman; plucky and enduring or thorough and faithful; as, fishy to the back-bone.—fishily, adv.—fish'i-ness, n.

fis'ĭ, 1 fis'i; 2 fis'ĭ, n. [Swahili.] The spotted hyena.

fisk, n. Same as FISC.

fisk, 1 fisk; 2 fisk, n. 1. Bradley / Ben (⁴/₁₂1854–), an American rear-admiral; inventor of range-finder, naval telescope, torpedo-plane, etc.: navigator of U. S. S. "Petrel" at battle of Manila Bay. 2. John (³/₁₂1842–⁷/₁₂1901), an American scientist, philosopher, and historian: Cosmic Philosophy. 3. Minnie Maddern (née Davey) (1865–), an American character actress, who first appeared in a juvenile role at three years of age.

fisk'er-y, 1 fisk'er-i; 2 fisk'er-y, n. Friskiness. [< FISK, v., < SW. fiska.] — fisk'i, ri. To frisk.

Fismes, 1 fim; 2 fim, n. A town in Marne department, France; captured by American troops from the Germans August 4, 1918.

fis'sen-les, 1 fis'en-les; 2 fis'ĕn-lĕs, a. [Scot.] Weak: foisonless.

fis'si-, 1 fis'i-: 2 fis'ĭ-. From Latin fissus, cleft (see FISSILE): a combining form.—fis'si-cele, n. Same as ENTEROCELE.—fis'si-cerci, —fis'si-cer'cate, a. Having the clefts divided.—fis'si-dac'tyl, a. Having the digits divided. fis'si-dac'tyle.

Fis'si-dens, 1 fis'i-denz; 2 fis'ĭ-dĕns, n. Bot. A genus of acrocarpous mosses having the 16 teeth of the peristome in a row, and the 2-ranked leaves on the plagiotropic shoots, with the midrib of each leaf winged. The species are found in stiff soil, on the banks of or near streams, in both hemispheres, in various climates. [< L. fissus, cleft, + dens, tooth.]

fis'si-gem-ma'tion, n. Biol. A mode of reproduction intermediate between fission and gemmation.

fis'si-ped, 1 fis'i-ped; 2 fis'ĭ-pĕd, a. That may be split, cleft, or divided in the direction of the grain, or of natural joints; readily separated into layers, as slate and mica-schist. 2. Bot. Tending to split, as the capsule of certain mosses. 3. Entom. Formed of plates that may be spread apart.—fissiped, n. [< L. fissus, pp. of findo, cleave.] — fis"si-bil'i-ty, n.—fis-sil'i-ty, n. 1. Fissile character or quality. 2. Petrol. Any rock the characteristic structure of which permits of its separation into parallel laminæ, as slate.

fis"si-lin'gual, a. Having a forked tongue: of or pertaining to the Fissilingua. [< FISSI- + LINGUAL.] — Fis"si-lin'gua, n. pl. Hyp. A division of lizards with an extensible tongue split at the tip, as in lacertids.

fis'sion, 1 fish'an; 2 fish'ŏn, n. 1. The act of splitting or breaking to pieces. 2. Biol. Spontaneous division of a cell or organism into 2 or more parts, especially as a mode of reproduction, as in infusorians and certain hydrozoans and worms; cell-division.

[< L. fusio(n-), < fusus; see FISSILE.] — fis'sion-al"gæ, n. pl. Bot. Same as SCHIZOPHYTA.—f. fungi, n. pl. Bacteria.—f. plants, n. pl. Same as SCHIZOPHYTA: they include both fission-algæ and fission-fungi.

fis"si-pal'mate, a. Partially web-footed; semipalmate, as a grebe.—fis'si-pal-mat'ed-ness, n.—fis-sip'a-ra, n. pl. Animals that reproduce by fission.—fis-sip'a-rism, n. Biol. Reproduction by fission. fis"si-pa-ra'tion; fis'si-par'i-ty.—fis-sip'a-rous, a. 1. Biol. Reproducing by fission. 2. Separating by fission.

The fissiparous tendency which has unfortunately rent the Methodists of England into three or four separate sects.

Review of Reviews Oct., 1891, p. 276.

—fis-sip'a-rous-ly, adv.—fis"si-pa'tion, n. Fissiparism.—fis'si-ped, 1. a. & n. Same as FISSIPED.—2. n. pl. Terrestrial carnivores. 2. Of or pertaining to the Fissipedia.—fis-sip'e-dal; fis"si-pe'di-al, II. a. One of the Fissipedia.—fis'si-pede.—Fis"si-pe'di-a, n. pl. Mam. A suborder of carnivores with separate toes, adapted for walking: opposed to Pinnipedia.—Fis-sip'e-dal; —fis'si-ros'tral, a. Having a wide split beak.—Fis"si-ros'tres, n. pl. Ornith. A division of passerine birds characterized and limited, with wide-split mouths, as in swallows and goatsuckers.—fis'si-ros'ter, n.

fis'sive, 1 fis'i; 2 fis'ĭ, a. [Scot.] Same as FIZZLE. 2. To make a faint continuous rustling or whistling sound; rustle. 3. To bustle about.

fis-su'ra, 1 fi-si'ra; 2 fi-sū'ra, n. [-RAS, 1 -z; 2 -rȧ, pl.] [L.] Anat. A fissure.—fissura of Rolando, a fissure of the brain where the flocculus is attached to the cerebellum.—f. parcellaris, same as FISSURA PRIMA.—f. prima, a fissure separating the anterior lobe of the cerebellum from the rest of it: the most marked fissure in the middle portion of that organ. It persists in all the lower mammalia.—f. rhinalis, in some mammals, a fissure running from the anterior lobe to the Sylvian fissure. Its course runs from the temporal lobe to the back of the brain is known as the postrhinal fissure.—f. secunda, a fissure which divides the central from the posterior lobe of the cerebellum and runs parallel to the fissura prima; the prepyramidal sulcus of man.

fis'sure, 1 fish'ur; 2 fish'ur, v. I. t. To produce a fissure in; crack; cleave; split; fracture; as, a rock fissured by heat.

Streams of sweet mountain crystal babble down, Embellishing black glen and fissured cliff.

EDWIN ARNOLD Light of Asia, p. 89. [e. a w. 1891.]

II. i. To open in fissures; split; crack.—fis"su-ra'tion, n. The act of fissuring or dividing; the state of being fissured.

fis'sure, n. 1. A narrow opening made by the splitting of a substance, or appearing as if so produced; a crack or crack-like depression; a cleft, slit, or furrow; specif. (1) in anatomy, one of the furrows on the surface of the brain that involve its entire substance; (2) in geology, a simple fracture of strata without dislocation; (3) a lesion, as of a fractured bone or chapped lips.

1. It has indeed a grand portal, that same Gap, not fully fifty feet in width, and more than three times as high: a narrow fissure, in fact, as complete as though made by the stroke of a giant's scimitar. LAURA Luttrell of Arren p. 47. [n. 1865.]

2. Zo. A narrow bearing resembling the cleft of a fissure. [< L. fissura, < findo, split.] Syn.: see BREACH.—amygdaline fissure, a fissure on the tentorial surface of the temporal lobe of the brain, near the amygdaline nucleus.—antesquamosal f., a fissure behind and nearly parallel to the fissure of Sylvius. It answers to the parallel fissure in Simitidæ.—ape's-fis'sure, n. Same as SIMIAN FISSURE.—callosal f., the fissure between the callosal portion of the corpus callosum and the overhanging cortex. It has only one wall of gray matter.—choroid f. (Embryol.), a fissure in the secondary optic vessel, formed by the invagination of the primary vesicle. It admits an intrusive growth of mesoblastic tissue, which ultimately forms the vitreous humor, etc., of the eye.—cranio-facial f., a fissure or gap, extending vertically, by which the mesethmoid is virtually divided into two parts.—exocipital f., same as SIMIAN FISSURE.—fis'sures-rup'tion, n. Geol. An eruption of lava through a cleft or fissure, usually of some length, in the crust of the earth.— f.-needle, n. Surg. A spiral needle by which the lips of a wound are brought together.— f. of Rolando (Anat.), a fissure that extends from near the vertex of the cerebrum downward and forward, separating the frontal from the parietal lobe.— f. of Sylvius, a widened fissure of the cerebrum extending from the base upward and backward, separating the frontal from the temporal lobe.— f. ovein, n. A vein of ore lying in a fissure.— fissicostate (-kŏs'tāt), a. Having the interval between the ilium and ischium which persists through life in struthionine birds, but in others fills up, leaving only the obturator foramen.— fissidactyl (-dăk'tĭl), a. Same as FISSIPED.— frontal fissures.— inferofrontal f., a fissure between the middle and inferior frontal convolutions.— intercerebral f., the great longitudinal fissure separating the right and left hemispheres of the cerebrum.— interparietal f., same as INTRAPARIETAL FISSURE.— intraparietal f., a fissure in the upper portion of the convex surface of the parietal lobe of the brain.— longitudinal f. The great longitudinal fissure that separates the two hemispheres of the brain. 2. A groove on the under surface of the liver.— obturator f. (Ornith.), same as ISCHIOPUBIC FISSURE.— occipital f., same as PARIETO-OCCIPITAL FISSURE.— parietal f., same as INTRAPARIETAL FISSURE.— parieto-occipital f., a deep and constant fissure between the occipital and parietal lobes of the brain.— posterior f., a fissure of the cerebellum behind the clivus.— postgracile f., a fissure between the posterior slender lobe of the cerebellum and the inferior semilunar lobe.— postiliac f., see under FISSURA RHINALIS.— precival f., same as FISSURA PRÆCENTRALIS.— Rivinian f., see under RIVINIAN.— simian f., a fissure that is found in the brains of all Quadrumana between the occipital and parietal lobes. It is probably represented in the human brain by the exoccipital fissure or the sulcus lunatus.— subfrontal f., same as INFEROFRONTAL FISSURE.— supercentral f., a fissure on the convex surface of the frontal lobe of the brain, parallel to the upper portion of the central fissure.— superior temporal f., same as ANTEROTEMPORAL FISSURE.— Sylvian f., a fissure prominent in the caravivra, situated above the Sylvian fissure.— fis'sur-al, a. = fis'sur-ri-form, a. Fissure-like in form.— fis'sure-less, a.— fis'sur-y, a. Much fissured. Fis'su-rel'la, n. [fissure, 2 (b)+-ella.] Conch. 1. A genus typical of Fissurellidæ. 2. [l-] A gastropod of this genus; a keyhole-limpet. [Dim. of L. fissura; see FISSURE.]

Fis'sur-rel'li-dæ, n. pl. [fissurella+-idæ.] = fis'sy-rel'lids, n. pl. Conch. A family of rhipidoglossate gastropods, especially those having a spiral shell perforated at the apex or with a slit in or near the anterior margin, as the keyhole-limpets.— Fis'sy-rel-la'ce-a†,— fis'su-rel'lid, n.— fis'sy-rel'loid, a.

fist, 1 fist; 2 fist, a. 1. To beat with the fist. 2. [Colloq., or Obs.] To grasp or handle with the fist.

fist†, n. 1. The hand closed tightly, especially closed for the purpose of striking; the clenched hand.

The law of England says that if one man holds his fist in the face of another, even though he does not strike it is an assault. H. Twiss Lord Eldon vol. ii, p. 198, fr. a n. 1844.] 2. [Colloq.] The hand thought of as capable of becoming a fist; as, he does not know how to fist as he ought aboard. 3. [Colloq.] Handwriting or its idiosyncrasies. 4. The claws of a bird of prey. 5. Print. An index-mark, ☞. 6. A handbreadth. [< AS. fyst, fist,] — fist'-ball', n. = fist'-stave, n. A cudgel used by the fist; the law of might rather than right.— f.-mate, n. An antagonist in a fight.— fist'ful, n. [Colloq.] A handful.— fis'ti-an'a, n. pl. Pugilistic anecdotes or lore.— fis'tic, a. Pertaining to the fists, especially when used in boxing; hence, pugilistic; as, the fistic arena; a fistic career.— fist'-wise, a. Like a fist.— fist'y, 1. a. [Rare.] Relating to the fists or pugilism. 2. [Obs.] Full of fists.

fist, n. A pustball. [< Ice. fisa, break wind.] fist'-ball'†, fist, 1 fist; 2 fist, n. [S. & W. U. S.] 1. Same as FIGH. 2. A common species of pustball, sometimes applied to man. fist'-e, — fist'y, a. Bothersome; tiresome; annoying, as a persistent dog.

fis'tic†, a. Pugilistic.

fist'-cuff', 1 fist'i-kuf'; 2 fist'i-cĭf', n. A cuff with the fist: used generally in the plural, when it signifies a pugilistic encounter; as, to engage in fisticuffs.

The taste for pugilism, or the pummelling of the human frame into a pulp for the force of others, as a mode of enjoyment or entertainment, is a relapse into barbarism.

fist'y-fy, n. [Rare.] = fisticuff with the fists.

fis-tu'ca, 1 fis-tū'kə; 2 fis-tū'ca, n. [L.] An ancient form of pile-driver; a rammer or beetle.

fis'tu-la, 1 fis'tiu-lə or -tiu-lə; 2 fis'tiu-lə or -tū-lə, n. [L.] 1. Pathol. (1) Any abnormal opening into a natural canal or hollow organ. (2) A long narrow canal caused by diseased action, and not disposed to heal, because of morbid conditions. 2. Eccl. A tube through which it was anciently the custom of communicants in the Roman Catholic Church to receive the wine of the sacrament: used now by the Pope alone when pontificating. 3. Vet. A deep-seated suppurative inflammation in the withers, ordinarily resulting from bruising. 4. Entom. The intermediate tube formed by the union of the two portions of the proboscis of a butterfly or moth. 5†. A reed or pipe.— amphibolic fistula, a fistula opened in the gall-bladder of an animal by means of which bile used in physiological study is obtained.— black or purging f., same as PITCHING-CASSIA.— branchial f., a fistula in the neck, caused by the vessels that have failed to close.— coccygeal f., a fistula in close proximity to the coccyx communicating with a dermoid cyst.— complete f., a fistula that has both an internal and an external opening.— fecal f., a fistula that passes through the abdominal wall and communicates with the intestine.— f. in ano, a fistula within or near the anus.— fis'tu-la-nee'dle, n. A blunt probe-like instrument used to pass a thread or a seton through a fistulous tract.— gastric f., an opening into the stomach through the abdominal wall, usually due to traumatic causes.— Thiry-Vella f., an artificial communication made between the exterior and part of the intestine, with the object of obtaining some of the intestinal juice.— vesical f., fistula of the urinary bladder. When it communicates with the abdomen, rectum, uterus, or other parts, it is separately distinguished as vesico-abdominal, vesico-rectal, vesico-uterine, etc.— fis'tu-lar, a. Resembling or of the nature of a fistula.— fis'tu-lar-y†.— fis'tu-la'tion, n. The formation of a fistula.— fis'tu-la-tome, n. A surgical instrument employed in cutting a fistula.— fis'tule†, n. A fistula.— fis'tu-li-form, a. Having the form of a fistula; tubular.— fis'tu-lous, a. 1. Cylindrical and hollow like a reed. 2. Fistular.

Fis'tu-la'ri-a, 1 fis'tiu-lə-ri'-ə or -tiu-lā'ri-ə, n. [Dim. of FISTULA, 5.] 1. A genus typical of Fistularidæ. 2. [l-] A fish of this genus; a tobacco-pipe fish. [< L. fistularis, pipelike, < fistula, pipe.]

Fis'tu-la-ri'i-dæ, 1 fis'tiu-lə-ri'-i-dē or -tiu-lā-rī'-i-dē; 2 fis'tu-lə-ri'i-dē, n. pl. Ich. A family of aulostomoideans with a long subcylindrical body, rudimentary, protruded median tailrays, and without spines; tobacco-pipe fishes.— fis'tu-la'ri-id, n.— fis'tu-la'ri-oid, a.

II. i. 1. To settle down and remain in one spot; stop wandering. 2. To become firm or solid, so as to resist volatilization; crystallize; congeal; solidify. [< LL. fixo, freq. of L. figo to fasten; thence, to stop.]

The best usage avoids such expressions as "Fix the furniture in the room," "Fix the books on the shelves," when the meaning is set or arrange them; nor, for a statue in its pedestal, a stone in the wall. Fix in the sense of repair is a provincialism. American and British colloquialism, rooted in popular use. In the United States, especially among mechanics and artificers, to fix a thing is to order it or work it without regard to make it answer its purpose, whether by arrangement, adjustment, repair, or otherwise; to fix a furnace, fix a clock, or the like, is to put it in order and set it to work by whatever process. Up is often added, and the expression is applied even to matters of business; as, "Fix that matter up somehow." Hence, a man who is in a position or employment that may dispose of it. The best speakers, while giving the popular term a certain colloquial license, prefer wherever practicable to substitute for the word or phrase. Fix in the sense of disable, injure, or kill, and fix up in the sense of dress elegantly, are vulgarisms.— to fix or upon, to decide upon; choose; select.

She knew no man she could f. upon. GOLDSMITH Vicar of Wakefield p. 22. [N. m. & co.]

fix'ture, 1 fiks'chur or -tiur; 2 fiks'chur or -tŭr, n. 1. Anything fixed firmly in its place, especially any part of the furniture of a house that is fixed firmly to it.

This (fixture), the modern corruption of fixture, was suggested, most probably, by mixture, with which, however, it is not in analogy. Mixture is not built on the English mix but on the stem of mixtus, and there is no fixus, but fix, as the stem of which to rear a legitimate substantive.
FITZEDWARD HALL Modern English p. 313. [c. 1873.]

2. Mech. Any device, constituting an essential element of a machine, which holds in position either the work or the tool acting upon the work.

The terms jig and fixture are frequently used interchangeably, but they sometimes denote devices which perform a function identical with that of other devices, as the tool-post of a lathe, as a rule, is not a jig, but is strictly fixture, not jig. A fixture in serving its purpose completely dependent upon the action of the machine of which it forms a part, while the jig is not.

3. One who or that which is expected to remain permanently in its position; as, our servants have lived with us so long that we consider them fixtures.

In civilized nations the greatest part of mankind are . . . fixtures to the soil on which they were born. DANIEL BENTHAM Works, International Law in vol. ii, p. 542. [w. r. 1843.]

4. Law. An article of a personal or chattel nature affixed to the freehold by a tenant, and removable by him, if it can be taken away without material injury to the realty, as gas-fixtures in a mercantile house, or machinery or apparatus in trade and manufactures. KENT Comm. vol. ii, p. 343.

The decisions of courts show great confusion as to the legal signification of the word fixture. It is used in various cases to express exactly opposite meanings — in one case to mean what is removable, in another that the same thing is not removable, by the tenant. But all recent decisions grout in consonance with the well liberalized rule of reason of the common law, which regarded everything affixed to the freehold as appertaining to the real estate and passing to the landowner. Now the consideration is chiefly governed by the nature and use of the thing affixed and the manifest intention of the party affixing it in each particular instance; the decisions concurring in that the tenant may put the fixtures must be within the tenant's term and without causing serious damage or waste to the realty. Hence there exists the contradictory phrase movable fixtures.

Whenever the appendage is of such a nature that it is not part and parcel of the building, but may be removed without injury to the building, then it is a mere chattel, and does not pass with a conveyance of the freehold. If, however, it be so connected with the building that it cannot be severed from it without injury to the building, then it is part of the realty and passes with the conveyance of the soil. 95 Ala. 77.

flag', n. 1. A piece of cloth, commonly of bunting, and usually square or oblong, either plain or bearing a device; used as a standard, symbol, or signal, and generally displayed by being attached by one edge to a staff, or to a halyard by which it may be hoisted to a pole, the edge nearest the staff being known as the hoist, while the length from the staff to the fly is called the fly. Compare BANNER. See plates of FLAGS. The flag is most commonly used as an emblem of nationality, as in the army, navy, or merchant marine. The first flag of the United States, raised by Washington at Cambridge, Jan. 2, 1776, consisted of thirteen stripes, alternate red and white, as at present, with a blue canton embazoned with the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew, as in the British flag. In 1777 Congress resolved that the canton be thirteen white stars in a blue field. In 1794, after the admission of Vermont and Kentucky, the stripes and stars were each made fifteen. In 1818, at the suggestion of Samuel C. Reid, the original thirteen stripes were restored and Congress voted to add a new star on the 4th of July succeeding the admission of each new State.

The British flag is a combination of the three flags of England, Scotland, and Ireland. The old flag of England was the cross of St. George, a red cross on a white field; that of Scotland, St. Andrew's cross, a white saltire on a blue field. After the union these were blended by blazoning the cross of St. George on the Scottish flag. In 1801 the cross of St. Patrick, a red saltire on a white ground, was combined with the others. This union now fills the canton in the red, the white, and the blue ensigns. See ENSIGN.

Flag"el-lid'i-a, ı flaj"e-lid'ı-ə; 2 flăg"ĕ-lĭd'ı-a, n. pl. Zoöl. A subclass of protozoans of the class Mastigophora.

They possess a sharply defined monocellulate body with a definite anterior end bearing one to four permanent motile organs — the flagella — or formcolonies. They are naked but all have the power of encystment. Reproduction takes place by longitudinal fission. Some (termed holophytic) resemble plants in their mode of nutrition and are classed by botanists as plants. Parasitic forms live upon the juices of other living organisms. Others (holozoic) take in solid food as animals.

flag'el-lid, ı flaj'e-lid; 2 flăg'ĕ-lĭd, n. Same as FLAGELLANT.

flag-el'lu-la, ı flaj-el'yu-lə; 2 flă-ĝĕl'yu-la, n. [-LÆ, ı -lē; 2 -lē, pl.] Protoz. 1. A nucleated cell-body having one or few large processes of vibratile protoplasm, characteristic of flagellate infusorians. 2. The germ or nucleiform part of a protozoan with a flagelliform process. [Dim. of L. flagellum; see FLAGELLUM.]

fla-gel'lum, ı flə-jel'um; 2 fla-ĝĕl'ŭm, n. [-LA, pl.] 1. Biol. A lash-like appendage, as the terminal part of an antenna; any protoplasmic motile process serving as an organ of locomotion, as in flagellate infusorians and bacteria; a large cilium. 2. A whip with several lashes or thongs; a scourge. 3. Bot. (1) A runner; a slender branch, as in the strawberry, which roots at the joints. (2) In Hepaticæ, a whip-like branch covered with minute or rudimentary leaves. [L., scourge, dim. of fragrum, scourge.]— flag'el-lum-ous, a. Having flagella; flagellate.— fla-gel'li-form, a. 1. Long, slender, and flexible, like a whip-lash. 2. Bot. Having the form of a flagellum or runner.

flag'e-o-let', ı flaj'e-ō-let'; 2 flăg'ĕ-o-lĕt' (XII), n. 1. A musical instrument resembling the flute, but blown at the end instead of at the side, and producing sounds similar to those of a piccolo, but less shrill. It usually has six finger-holes, and the mouthpiece is constructed like a toy whistle. 2. An organ-stop. [F., dim. of OF. flageol, < LL. flauta, < L. flatus; see FLUTE]. — f.-player, n. One who uses a flag.

flame, n. 1. A stream of vapor or gas made luminous by heat, usually by the heat of its own combustion; as, the flame of a lamp; flames of hydrogen from the sun.

The light of flame is chiefly due to the incandescent solid particles (usually of carbon) suspended in the gas. When the combustion is perfect the light may be very feeble, being due to the glow from a Bunsen burner, or an ordinary gas-stove in which the air mixes with the gas before burning. Hydrogen produces an intense heat, yet very little light. The flame of an ordinary candle consists of three parts: (1) unburned vapor around the wick, known as the area of no combustion; (2) a luminous envelop consisting of oxygen, hydrogen and carbon, the area of partial combustion; and (3) the outer envelop where the carbon receives sufficient oxygen from the air to allow of its burning, the area of complete combustion. In the case of burning solids or liquids, as wood or oil, the flame is supplied by the decomposition of the burning substance. In physics the meaning of the word is sometimes extended to include non-luminous streams of gases undergoing combustion.

a, area of no combustion; b, area of partial combustion; c, area of complete combustion.

2. An appearance or color like that of a blaze; glow; brilliancy; as, a flame came into his cheeks. 3. A condition of excitement proceeding from rage, strife, or inflamed passion; as, the people ran in a flame on account of the war news. 4. The passion of love; an ardent affection. 5. [Colloq.] One who is beloved; a sweetheart. 6. Her. Fire: usually represented as gules, and accompanying the salamander, phenix, or wyvern. 7. The tuft of cilia borne by the flame-cell and projecting into the cavity of the excretory canal in flatworms. 8. [Eng.] A luminous appearance emitted at night from a school of herrings. 9. [Ice.] A geometrid moth, Anticlea rubidata. float,] flōt; 2 flōt, v. I. i. 1. To bear up in or on any liquid or gas; hold up and cause to move on or near the surface of a liquid; as, the rising fish floats the shaky line corks floated the child. 2. To cause to move without effort or will; convey; carry as by floating.

I have been floated into this thought, this hour, this connection of events, by secret currents of night and mind. EMERSON Essays, Intellect in first series, p. 259. [R. M. & CO. 1890.]

3. Finance. To put in circulation; sell or dispose of, or find a market for; secure assistance or insuring support for; as, to float a scheme; to float bonds.

As late as '78 Georgia issued as per cent. bond. She has since floated a four per cent.

H. W. GRADY New South p. 180. [R. M. & CO. 1890.]

4. To smooth the surface of (soft plaster) with a wetted float. 5. To place on a platform for fattening; as, to float oysters. 6. To apply a thin coat of plaster-material to, as pottery. 7. To subject (a pigment or the like, as graphite) to the action of a current of water or air, so that the finer portions may be separated from the coarser. 8. To hunt, as deer, by means of a boat at night. 9. To irrigate; flood. 10. To file, as a horse's teeth. 11. Elec. To connect up (a storage battery) as a floating battery. 12. Phot. To lay a sheet of paper on a sensitizing solution. 13. Stereotyping. To cover (a form) with plaster of Paris and cloth, to form loose plaster before making a mold. 14. To cause (a rumor or report) to circulate.

II. v. i. To rest on the surface of a fluid, without or with slight movement; to be supported or carried along by a fluid, either liquid or gaseous; as, the cork floats on the water; a feather floats in the air; to float with the current; to be suspended in a fluid, as particles of matter; also, to move freely under the surface.

Victorious banners were already floating on the marsin of the Great Desert. De Quincey The Cæsars p. 242. [R. & P. 1854.]

2. To move lightly and without effort, as if buoyed up; as, she floated away in the waltz. 3. To move on with any course of things; drift about passively or without purpose; as, he floats about, living on his friends.

Parliament had floated to power because he personified order as opposed to anarchy.

S. R. GARDINER Thirty Years' War p. 111. [S. 1880.]

4. Weaving. To pass, as a weft-thread, under or over several warp-threads at a time. [< AS. flotian, < flēotan, float.] SYN.: swim. An object floats when upborne in a fluid without action; a living being swims when borne up, or borne onward, in a liquid by action of its own; one swimming may rest himself by floating; a cork floats on water; the hawk seems to float in the upper air.— ANT., drown, sink.— to float a form, to solder on the inside; as, to float up the ends of tin cans.

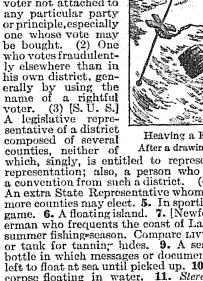
float, n. 1. An object that floats on a liquid, or buoys up something. Specif.: (1) A cork or other light object attached to a fishing-line or seine to mark its position, keep a hook at a required depth, or show when fish are biting or caught. (2) A buoyant device to float a person in the water; a life-preserver. (3) A small boat used in gunning. (4) A raft, or raft-like construction, as a heavy drag for smoothing land, a light harrow for loosening the surface of a race-track, etc.; by extension, a floating wharf. (5) A piece of ivory floated on the mercury in a barometer-tube. (7) A floating member, as a hollow metal or glass globe working a ball valve or plug valve; specif., in a steam-trap or in the float-feed-mechanism of a gasoline-engine, as of an automobile. (8) A variety of fishing-float. (9) A floating hydrometer. (10) The limb by aid of which differences in the level of the liquid in a burette are measured. (11) A platform on which oysters are fattened for market. (12) A floating island.

2. One of various classes of appliances. (1) A float-board. (2) A plasterers' spreading-trowel, or rule; a float-rule. (3) A single-cut file, usually coarse; a float-cut file; also, a shoemakers' rasp used to take away the end s of nails, etc. (4) A marble-workers' polishing-block or runner. (5) The cover of a gunners' tar-bucket. (6) [Eng.] A coal-cart. (7) [Eng.] A low-bodied crank-axled dray for carrying heavy articles. (8) A wheeled platform used in a pageant or procession, upon which a spectacular display is arranged; a flat. (9) [Eng.] A wooden frame used on a cart or wagon to give greater carrying capacity.



3. A dock or basin in which a ship is floated. 4. Geol. & Mining. Stray pieces of rock, ore, or gems that have been detached from the parent ledge and carried to a distance. Such pieces often lead to the discovery of mines. 5. In weaving, the passage of a filling-thread under or over several warp-threads without being engaged by them. 6. Zool (1) A hollow or inflated part or organ in an animal to buoy it up in water, as the appendage to the foot of a violet-snail or janthinid, or the pneumatocyst of a hydrozoan, as the Portuguese man-of-war. (2) A sailless man or velellid hydrozoan. 7. A low, broad vat for brewing. 8. An arrangement for hardening steel with a copious jet of water. 9. Ceram. A wash, slip, or covering coat. 10. Theat. (1) A mechanical contrivance for elevating performers above the level in spectacular plays. (2) pl. The footlights, because, when wicks were used, they floated in an oil-filled trough. 11. Stereotyping. An iron plate that floats in the melted type-metal, and is adjusted to the plane of the surface so as to regulate the thickness of the stereotype. floating-plate†, 12. An irrigating-ditch. 13. Her. A flat, toothed tool represented in the arms of the London Bowyers' Company. 14. [U. S.] A piece of attention to prevent empt public land. (2) [Mex.] A certificate giving the holder authority to enter a certain amount of land. 15. [U. S.] A political floater. 16. pl. Agric. Mineral phosphates of low grade ground very fine and used as fertilizers. 17. Weeds, ice, etc., floating in the mass. 18†. A flux; flood. 19†. A wave. 20†. The process of floating. [< AS. flota, ship, < flēotan, float.]

flote†,— Erdmann's float (Chem.), a short glass cylinder sealed at each end and small enough to permit of introduction into a burette, in which it moves up or down as the liquid is poured in or drawn off. By means of a transverse mark on the cylinder, the amount of liquid drawn off during any operation is readily observed.— float'-board", n. One of the paddles or buckets of a water-wheel or of a paddle-wheel.— f.-boat, n. A ship's long-boat or launch: formerly so called because often tied astern: a lighter for transferring passengers or cargo: a raft.— f.-carburetor, n. See FLOAT-FEED, n.— f.-case, n. 1. A device for elevating burdens by the pressure of water upon an air-tight case in a well or shaft. 2. Hydraul. A caisson.— f.-chamber, n. Any reservoir, tank, or chamber in which a float operates.— f.-coat, n. A thin wash of plaster of Paris on a mortar coating.— f.-copper, f.-gold, etc. See FLOAT-MINERAL.— f.-feed, n. Mech. Automatic feed controlled by a float; specif., said of the float-carburetor of a gasoline-engine. II. n. A device, as the carburetor in a motor-car, or in an internal-combustion engine, in which the feed of the liquid is regulated by a float.— f.-file, n. A single-cut file.— f.-gage, n. A floating gage. See GAGE.— f.-grass, n. Any of several species of marsh-grass or wet meadow-grasses, as manna-grass and floating foxtail-grass.— f.-key, n. A sliding key; a projecting ridge or spline fixed to a pulley but movable along a keyseat in a shaft: a key that is movable axially.— f.-man, n. One who takes care of a float, as in hunting water-fowl.— f.-mineral, n. Small fragments of any ore carried away from the ore bed by the action of water or by gravity alone, often leading to the discovery of mines; also, metallic particles detached in stamping ore, and suspended in water. f.-ore†,— f.-road, n. Logging. A cleared channel in a swamp.— f.-rule, n. See FLOAT, n., 2 (2).— f.-stage, n. A raft of timber and casks; a floating platform moored to a ship on which sailors train petitioned Congress. (2).— f.-water, n. A well-head in which a float forms a part, as for bottom-fishing.— f.-trap, n. In a steam-engine, a trap in which the rise of the level of the water of condensation raises a ball which operates a valve to discharge accumulated water.— long f., a plasterers' float requiring two men to handle it.

float'age, float'ant, float-a'tion. Same as FLOTAGE, etc.

float'er,] flōt'er; 2 flōt'er, n. 1. One who or that which floats or causes to float. 2. Specif., a float for registering the height or level of a liquid. 3. One who moves about, taking temporary employment; specif., a substitute at elections. [Slang, U. S.] (1) A voter not attached to any particular party or principle; specially one whose vote may be bought. (2) One who votes fraudulently elsewhere than in his own district, generally by using the name of a rightful voter. (3) [U. S.] A legislative representative of a district composed of several counties, and to which, singly, is entitled to representation or extra representation; also, a person who is a delegate to a convention from such a district. (4) [Miss. & Tenn.] An extra State Representative whom either of two or more counties may elect. 5. In sporting, one who floats a game. 6. A floating island. 7. [Newfoundland.] A fisherman who frequents the coast of Labrador during the summer season, returning to St. John's, N. F., in a vessel or tank for tanning hides. 9. A sealed case, cask, or bottle in which messages or documents are placed and left to float at sea until picked up. 10. [Slang, U. S.] A corpse floating in water. 11. Stereotyping. Same as FLOAT, n., 11. 12. Insur. An open or floating policy. 13. [Cant, Eng.] An exchequer bill, railway bond, etc., accepted as security, especially one given by a bank.

After a drawing by G. Matania.

float'ing,] flōt'ing; 2 flōt'ing, pa. 1. Buoyed up or carried along by a liquid or gas; borne on the surface of a liquid; as, a floating battery; a floating Bethel; floating dust. 2. Unattached to moorings or any fixed anchorage; free to move about; not fixed; as, a floating island; a floating rib. 3. Moving about; not settled, fluctuating; temporary; as, the floating population of a city.

Our floating fancies not determined by outward circumstances or by some fixed purpose, move like clouds in the sky.

MCCOSH Emotions bk. i, ch. 3, p. 72. [S. 1880.]

4. Finance. (1) Not funded; due at various times and in various amounts; said of a debt. (2) Not fixed. (3) Not invested permanently at interest or for income; not fixed, in circulation; ready for use: said of funds or capital.— float'ing-board", n. A corrugated wrought-iron can from the inside; a floating-plate.— f. cartilage, a loose body, variously constituted, found in the knee-joint, usually as a result of injury.— f. fly, a dry fly.— f. garden, a kind of garden common on the lakes near the city of Mexico: used for growing vegetables, flowers, etc. Such gardens are usually made of mat rafts made of aquatic vegetation, and are towed from one part of a lake to another by means of a rope.— f. island, (1) A mass of earth or of vegetation, broken away from the side of a lake and drifting from place to place: called by the creoles in Louisiana a flottant or floater. 2. An artificial island, made, as on Chinese rivers, by heaping earth on matted aquatic growths, or a framework of wood, finally the island is anchored with poles driven through to the bottom.— f.-land, n. A dessert consisting of boiled custard with the beaten white of eggs floating on its surface.— f. rib, a rib, either of two horizontal brake-levers used under the center of a car-body.— f.-plate, n. 1. Same as FLOAT, n., 11. 2. Same as FLOATING-BOARD.— f. pulley (Insur.), an open policy; a floater. See POLICY.— f. reef (Mining), masses of float-ore.— f.-ring, n. Mech. A packing-ring held in place by the piston-rings.— f.-screed, n. A strip for guiding a plasterers' float.— f.-star, n. A frostflower.

float'ing, n. 1. The act, operation, or process of floating, in any sense of the verb. 2. A filling-thread (weft) that spans several warp-threads without being engaged by them. 3. (1) The spreading of plaster or stucco with a float. (2) A second coat of plastering, especially where there are three coats. 4. The process of fattening oysters or scallops by means of a float.

float'ing-ly, adv. So as to float; in a buoyant manner.

float'some,] flōt'sam; 2 flōt'sam, n. [Dial.] Flotsam.

float'stone',] flōt'stōn'; 2 flōt'stōn', n. 1. Mineral A variety of opal that floats on water: found in light spongy concretionary or tuberose masses. 2. A brick-layers' rubbing-stone for working out the defects in a brick that has been cut.

float'y,] flōt'i; 2 flōt'y, a. 1. [Prov. Eng.] Tall, as grass. 2†. Buoyant.

flob,] flŏb; 2 flŏb, v. I. i. [Prov. Eng.] To swell up, puff out; cause to puff. II. t. [Rare.] To move about clumsily or heavily. [< FLOP.]

floc"cil-la'tion,] flŏk"sĭ-lā'shan, 2 flŏc"çi-lā'shon, n. Pathol. A stage in delirium, as in fevers, in which a patient picks at the bedclothes with the fingers: regarded as a grave symptom. [< L. floccus, lock of wool.]

floc'cose,] flŏk'ōs or flŏk-ōs'; 2 flŏc'ōs or flŏc-ōs', a. 1. Woolly: especially, in botany, composed of or bearing tufts of soft hairs or wool. 2. Ornith. Flocculent. [< L. floccosus, < floccus, lock of wool.]— floc'cose-ly, adv.

floc'cu-lar,] flŏk'yu-lər; 2 flŏc'yu-lar, a. Of, pertaining to, or like a flocculus, especially of the cerebellum.

floc'cu-late,] flŏk'yu-lāt; 2 flŏc'yu-lat, v. Geol. To be joined together in small lumps, as some soils. 2. Chem. & Phys. To gather into flaky masses floc'cu-late,] flŏk'yu-lāt; 2 flŏc'yu-lat, a. Having a flocculus or tuft of hairs.

floc"cu-la'tion,] flŏk'yu-lā'shan; 2 flŏc"yu-lā'shon, n. The act or process of becoming or causing to become flocculent; specif., in chemistry and physics, the process of gathering into flakes the particles of any substances performed by agitating the particles in a liquid.

floc'cule,] flŏk'yūl; 2 flŏc'yul, n. A loose tuft, like wool; specif., in chemistry and physics, a loosely joined fluffy mass obtained by flocculation.

floc'cu-lence,] flŏk'yu-lens, 2 flŏc'yu-lēnç, n. 1. The state of being flocculent. 2. Entom. The soft, waxy substance ejected from certain insects, as leaf-hoppers and plant-lice.— floc'cu-len-cy, n.

floc'cu-lent,] flŏk'yu-lent; 2 flŏc'yu-lənt, a. 1. Resembling wool; woolly; floccose. 2. Ornith. Of, pertaining to, or like flocculence. 3. Covered with flocculence. 4. Coalescing in flakes. 5. Bot. Pubescent, as the life-everlasting or the edelweiss.— flocculent precipitate, a precipitate that remains suspended in liquid as a loose, cloud-like mass.

floc'cu-lus,] flŏk'yu-lus; 2 flŏc'yu-lŭs, n. [-LI,] -lī; 2 -lī, pl.] 1. A little flake, as in a flocculent precipitate; a flock. 2. Anat. A small lobe in the inferior part of the cerebellum. 3. A small tuft of wool or wool-like hairs, as on a plant or the leg of a bee. 4. Astron. One of the gaseous cloud-like masses shown by spectroscopic examination to exist in the surface of the sun. [Dim. of L. floccus, lock of wool.— floc'cu-lose, a. Woolly; specif., in botany, diminutively floccose. floc'cu-lous†.

floc'cus,] flŏk'us; 2 flŏc'ŭs, n. [-CI,] -sī; 2 -çī, pl.] [L.] 1. A tuft of wool or wool-like hairs, as at the end of the tail in some quadrupeds. 2. Ornith. The downy covering of first-formed part of the plumage of a young bird. 3. Bot. (1) A tuft of woolly hairs. (2) pl. The hyphal threads or mycelium of the smuts.

floc'cy,] flŏk'i; 2 flŏc'y, a. Same as FLOCCOSE.

flock',] flŏk; 2 flŏk, v. I. i. To come together in a flock; go or be together; associate gregariously; assemble; crowd; as, the sparrows flock in winter.

A polyglot crowd of tourists came flocking into the small waiting-room. ALDRICH Queen of Sheba p. 165. [C. & C. 1877.]

II. t. [Archaic.] To gather together; bring together.

2†. To bring together.— flock'ing-fowl", n. [U. S.] A scaup.

flock', n. 1. To cover with flock, as in making flock-paper. 2. To fill with flocks or fine pieces of cloth, as a cushion.— flock'ing-mach"ine, n. A machine for spreading flock on paper coated with size.

flock', n. 1. A company or collection of animals, particularly of small animals, as sheep, goats, birds, or bees. Specif.. (1) When unqualified, a collection of sheep or goats; as, firstlings of the flock

Our flocks are white on many a hill.

MACAULAY Prophecy of Capys st. 12.

(2) Among sportsmen, a company of wild fowl.

A flock of wild swans passed, voyaging north
To their nest places on Himilaut.

EDWIN ARNOLD Light of Asia bk. I, st. 15.

2. Figuratively, the persons belonging to a congregation, church, parish, or diocese, under the care of their spiritual guide or pastor. See SHEPHERD.

Late in the evening the minister came home from Hornby. He had been called on to visit a sick member of his flock.

ELIZABETH C. STARKEL Cousin Phillis p. 40. [S. & CO. 1870.]

3. A company of persons, especially when regarded as unorganized or as blindly following a leader; a crowd; as, a flock of people; a flock of sheep. 4. [Rare.] A family of children in relation to their parents, or a number of persons under tutelage. [< AS. flocc, orig. of birds, < root of flōgan, fly.]

flock', n. [Obs. except in compounds.] Flocculent wool, hair, down, or the like, as the fluff of cloth, etc.; specif., in dyeing, the refuse of wool, cotton, or silk, used in making flock-paper.

flock'-bed", n. A bed filled with flock.

flock'-down", n. [Local, U. S.] A scaup.— flock'-man, n. A herder; shepherd.— flock'mas"ter, n. One who owns or oversees a flock: especially [Austral.], a breeder of improved stock.— f.-walk†, n. A sheep-range.

flock'-pa"per, n. 1. Finely ground wool, cloth, rags, felt, or vegetable fiber, used for coating wall-paper; wool-dust. See FLOCK-POWDER and FLOCK-PAPER. 2. A tuft of wool or the like; a lock. 3. Short refuse wool. 4. A flock bed. 5. Chem. Any small tufted or flake-like mass of matter floating in a solution, especially if produced by precipitation. [Cp. L. floccus, lock of wool.] —flock bed, a bed stuffed with flock, or with flocks of wool or hair.—flock'-cut"ter, n. A machine for making flocks. —f.-duster, n. A machine for cleansing flock by removing ordinary dust.—f.-opener, n. A machine for loosening out bunches of wool-dust or other flock, in order that it may feed properly to paper that is being flocked.—f.-paper, n. Wall-paper sized and covered or figured with flock; velvet-paper.—f.-pated†, a. Thick-headed; stupid.—f.-powder, n. 1. Powdered or ground wool or cloth used for coating flock-paper. 2†. Flock used for giving substance to cloth. —f.-printing, n. A process of printing in size for ornamentation, and dusting with flock while wet: employed for making ornamental signs on cardboard or the like.

flock'et†, n. A loose robe worn by women in the 16th century.

flock'ing, 1 flek'ɪŋ; 2 flŏk'ing, n. 1. The act of removing flocks from a fabric. 2. A mass of damaged or broken cotton-fibers formed on the combing-needles of a cotton-combing machine when improperly adjusted.

flockt, pp. Flocked. S. S.

Flock'ton, 1 flek'tən; 2 flŏk'ton, n. A borough in the West Riding of Yorkshire, England.

flock'wise, 1 flek'waiz; 2 flŏk'wīs, adv. After the manner of a flock; in flocks. flock'ly†.

flock'y, 1 flek'ɪ; 2 flŏk'y, a. 1. Resembling flock; floccose. 2. Rich in flocks.

flo-coon', 1 flə-kūn'; 2 flŏ-cōōn', n. A threadlike woolly or stringy substance frequently found as a covering on the bodies of some insects, as aphids. [< L. floccus, lock of wool.]

Flod'den, 1 flɒd'n; 2 flŏd'n, n. A hill in the Cheviot Range, Northumberland, England; scene of the decisive defeat of the Scots under James IV. by the English under the Earl of Surrey, Sept. 9, 1513, described in Scott's Marmion.

flodge, 1 floj; 2 flodġ, n. [Prov. Eng.] A puddle. [< FLOOD.]

floe, 1 flō; 2 flō, n. A collection of masses of floating polar ice; also, a separate mass of such ice, or a large individual field of ice with a comparatively level surface.

And steel-muscled Bartlett . . . at the wheel of the Roosevelt hammering a passage through the floes. ROBERT E. PEARY Discovery of the North Pole p. 20. [F. A. S. & CO. '10.]

[< Dan. flage; cp. FLAW[1], FLAKE[1].]—floe'-berg", n. Floe-ice in large masses, heaped up and compacted together, as distinguished from an iceberg proper.—f.-ice, n. Floating ice on the surface of the sea.—f.-rat, n. The ringed seal. —f.-till, n. Geol. See TILL.

floek, 1 flūk; 2 flük. [S.-Afr. D.] I. vt. To swear. II. n. An oath.

flog, 1 flog; 2 flŏg, v. [FLOGGED, FLOGD[S]; FLOG'GING.] I. t. 1. To chastise by striking with a whip, birch rod, ferule, or the like; whip; lash; beat. See illus. under FLAGELLATION. 2. To lash (the water) with the line in fishing. 3. Carp. To cut roughly into shape preparatory to a more accurate treatment. 4. [Prov. Eng.] To outdo; excel. II. i. To flap violently: said of a sail. [Cp. AS. flocan, strike, L. flagello, whip.] Syn.: see BEAT.—to flog a dead horse, to try to arouse fresh interest in a dead question.—to f. round (or through) the fleet, to give (a sailor) a specified number of lashes as he is brought alongside each ship of the fleet: an obsolete mode of naval punishment.—to f. the clock, to push the hands ahead so as to lessen the time for work.—flog'ga-bl(e[P], a. Ready for or deserving a flogging.—flog'ger, n. 1. One who or that which flogs. 2. A bung-starter. 3. [Racing Slang, Eng.] A cut whip.—flog'mas"ter, n. One whose office it is to flog, or direct the flogging of, prisoners.—flog'ster, n. [Rare.] One addicted to flogging, as of children or pupils.

flog'ging, 1 fleg'ɪŋ; 2 flŏg'ing, n. 1. The act of beating or thrashing with a whip, lash, ferule, or the like; a whipping; lashing. 2. In angling, a thrashing of the water with the line.—flog'ging-chis"el, n. A heavy chisel used in chipping iron castings.—f.-hammer, n. A large hammer used with a flogging-chisel.—flog'ging-ly, adv.

floit†, vt. To play the flute.

floit, 1 floit; 2 flŏit, n. [Scot.] 1. A flatterer. 2. A petted person. 3. A flute. 4. A fight; contest.

flong, 1 fleŋ; 2 flŏng, n. [Eng.] The sheets of prepared paper used for making matrices in stereotyping by the papier-maché process; also, a matrix of such paper.

flood, 1 flud; 2 flŏd, v. I. t. 1. To pour an abundance of water or other liquid upon, over, or into; inundate; deluge; as, to flood a meadow; to flood the eyes with tears. 2. Figuratively, to supply abundantly or in excess; as, to flood the city with advertisements.

II. i. 1. To rise to or be at the flood, as the sea; rise and overflow, as a stream; as, in the spring rains the river floods. 2. To bleed copiously after childbirth; flow; also, to have an excessive menstrual discharge.

flood, n. 1. An unusually abundant flow of water in a stream, rising, and overflowing land not commonly covered with water; an inundation, freshet, or deluge; as, the flood burst the dam. 2. The state or condition of water, or of that which may be likened to water, in overflow: as, a stream at its flood.

Our love at its highest flood rushes beyond its object, and loses itself in the sense of divine mystery.
GEORGE ELIOT Adam Bede p. 45. [T. 1859.]

3. Specif., the Noachian deluge. See DELUGE, n., 1.

The tradition of the Flood may . . . be properly regarded as universal. HUGH MILLER Testimony of Rocks p. 299. [G. & L. 1858.]

4. The semi-diurnal coming in of the tide, as opposed to the ebb; especially, the tide at its height; high tide.

Unsure the ebb and flood of thought.
EMERSON The Poet pt. ii, st. 15.

5. Anything that moves or seems to move in a full stream; a copious flow or outpouring, as of sunlight. 6. An abundant supply (of anything); especially, an overbundance or plethora; as, a flood of callers.

Our century has been distinguished by a rising flood of inventions. STRONG Our Country p. 4. [B. & T. CO. 1885.]

7. Any great body of water; the sea; a river.

Down the sable flood we glided.

Flor and Blanche"flor', 1 flōr, blansh"flōr'; 2 flōr, blänch"-flōr'. The title of a minnesong of Arabian or Persian origin, written by Conrad Fleck, about 1220. It relates the story of two children in love with each other. Flor, who is the son of a pagan king, is brought up with Blancheflor, who is a stolen child. Anxious to part them, the king sells Blancheflor to some eastern traders. Flor searches for her and succeeds in finding her in the palace of a sultan who is a sorcerer, and reaches her by hiding in a basket of roses. When discovered the sultan orders both to be cast into the flames, but is so moved by their love that he sets them free and they return home and marry. The romance, which was adopted by Boccaccio in his Il Filocolo, has been reproduced in various languages, as English, French, German, and Spanish.

F. L. S., abbr. Fellow of the Linnæan Society.

FLT., abbr. Flat; without interest; used on stock-tickers.

flu, i. [Colog.] Influenza; a popular contraction.

flu'a-ta-tion, i. flū"ə-tē'shən; 2 flū"ā-tā'shon, n. The application of the preservative fluate.

flu'ate, i. flū'ēt; 2 flū'āt. [< FLUE, -ATE-INC.] To supply.

flu'ate, n. 1. A solution of silicofluorid, brushed upon stone to protect from weathering. 2?. Same as FLUORID. [< FLUOR.]

floy'a-vil, i. flōi'ə-vil; 2 flō'ə-vil, n. Chem. A yellow resin (C$_{20}$H$_{30}$O) contained in gutta-percha, from which it is extracted by alcohol and similar solvents. flu'an-ite.

flub, i. flŭb; 2 flŭb, vi. [Prov. Eng.] To slam; flop.

flub, n. Same as FOOTBALL, 2.

flub'dub, i. flŭb'dŭb; 2 flŭb'dŭb, n. 1. Drivel; twaddle; flapdoodle. 2. Print. An insignificant stock ornament.—flub-dub'der-y, n. The act or process of producing flubdub; also flubdub collectively.

flue'an, } i. flū'ən, flūin; 2 flų'ən, flū'an, n. [Corn-flue'can, } wall.] Mining. A soft clay-like material, usually found between the hard rock wall of a vein and the ore.

The fluccan is the half-decomposed rock adjoining a vein.

DANA Geology pt. ii, p. 1, ed. ii, b. a. co. 1880.)

flue, i. flūz; 2 flų, n. A copper coin, the fulus.

flue'tu-ate, i. flūk'chu-ēt or -tiu-ēt; 2 flūk'chu-āt or -tā-ēt, v. [-AT-IN-; -AT-INC.] 1. t. To throw or put into a state of fluctuation. 2. i. To be in a state of rolling waves.

II. i. 1. To move like a wave with successive rise and fall; have the appearance of rolling waves; undulate.

The surface rolls and fluctuates to the eye.

THOREAU Excursions p. 211, ed. 1863.

2. To pass backward and forward irregularly from one state or degree to another; waver; oscillate; as, the market fluctuates; a fever fluctuates. [< L. fluctuatus, pp. of fluctuo, < fluctus, wave.]

SYN.: hesitate, oscillate, swerve, undulate, vacillate, vary, veer, waver. A pendulum oscillates: waves fluctuate or undulate, a light or a flame wavers; a frightened steed swerves from the course; veers or wavers on either the mark or line; the temperature varies; the wind veers when it suddenly changes its direction. That which veers may steadily keep in the new direction; that which fluctuates, undulates, or wavers returns upon its way. As regards mental states, he who hesitates sticks (L. hæreo) on the verge of decision; he who wavers does not stick to a decision; he who vacillates decides now one way, and now another; one vacillates between contrasted decisions or actions; he wavers between decision and indecision, or between action and inaction. Persons waver; things waver: feelings fluctuate or vary.—ANT.: abide, adhere, hold fast, persist, stand fast, stay, stick.

—flue'tu-ant, a. Tending or liable to fluctuate.—flue'tu-a-bil'i-ty, n.—flue'tu-an-cy†, n. Tendency to fluctuate.—flue'tu-ant, a. 1. Med. Showing fluctuations, as a tumor. 2. Moving or shaped like a wave.

flue'tu-a-tile, i. flūk'chu-ə-til; 2 flūk'chu-ə-tīl, [or -tā-]ə'shon, n. 1. The act or process of fluctuating; frequent irregular change back and forth from one state or degree to another; varying movement or action.

The alternate periods of activity and depression which have affected the industries of this country . . . have been mere fluctuations or ebbs and flows in the great rising tide of progress.

H. GEORGE Science of Political Economy Jan., 1887, p. 434.

2. A wavering or change, as of opinion; also, a rising and falling, as of prices. 3. Med. An undulating motion that may be induced in a fluid, as pus in a cavity, as perceived by the hand. 4. Biol. A non-heritable variation in organisms: opposed to heritable mutation. [< L. fluctuatio(n-), < fluctuo; see FLUCTUATE.] —fluctuation structure, same as FLOW-STRUCTURE.

flue'tu-os'i-ty, n. A wavy condition.

flue'tu-ous†, a. Of or pertaining to waves.

flue, i. flū; 2 flų, vi. [FLUED; FLU'ING.] To widen, spread, or slant, like the jambs of a fireplace.

flue, a. [Prov. Eng.] 1. Shallow. flewt. [Prov. Eng.] 2. Lacking in strength; sickly.

flue', n. 1. A channel or passage for smoke or air, or for gases of combustion. Specif.: (1) A smoke-duct in a chimney; sometimes, the chimney itself. (2) A fire-tube in a boiler, fastened to the crown-sheet or to the fire-box sheet and to the smoke-box, surrounded by water, and designed to increase the heating surface. (3) A hot-air passage in a wall.

The chimney-sweep . . . cried when he had to climb the dark flues, rubbing his poor knees and elbows raw.

KINGSLEY Water-Babies ch. 1, p. 4. [MACM., 1872.]

2. An organ-pipe of flute or open diapason quality. 3. [Prov. Eng.] A gable coping or end-wall coping. 4. A fishing-net of various designs. flewt. 5. [Rare.] The spiral cavity of a sea-shell. [Cp. OF. flue, a flowing (< L. fluo, flow), and floop, crease, fold, and flouet, a flute.] 6. A steam-boiler having interior flues.—f. bridge, n. Metal. A wall of fire-brick in a reverberatory furnace, at the other end of the hearth from the fire-bridge and between the hearth and the flue.—f.-chamber, n. An enlargement of the exhaust-flue used for the oxygenation of the fuel-gases or the precipitation of suspended solid matter.—f.-cinder, n. Slag from a boiling- or puddling-furnace.—f.-cure, n. A method of curing tobacco by means of drying-flues distributed in the barn: used especially on yellow tobacco.—f.-cutter, n. An implement for cutting out the flues.—f.-dust, n. The dust, more or less metalliferous, collected in the flue of a metallurgical furnace.—f. gas, n. The complex gaseous mixture found in the flues of coal-fired smelting furnaces.—f.-hammer, n. A coopers' hammer used in rounding out the edge of an iron hoop to fit it to a cask.—f.-heater, n. 1. An arrangement for heating air in a ventilating-shaft. 2. A heater, as for feed-water, placed in the flues of a furnace.—f.-nct, n. Same as FLUE, 4.—f.-pipe, n. A tipped organ-pipe, as distinguished from a reed-pipe.—f.-plate, n. A boiler-sheet in which the ends of flues are fastened. f.-sheet†.—f.-register, n. Organ-building. A flue-stop.—f.-scraper, n. A device provided with metal edges or brushes used for cleaning the flues of a furnace.—f.-stop, n. A flute-stop in an organ.—f.-surface, n. The heating-surface of the flues of a steam-boiler.—flue'way", n. A passage traversing a flue; also, a flue of any description.—f.-work, n. The flue-stops of an organ collectively, as distinguished from the reed-stops.—Fox flue, a flue commonly used in Scotch marine boilers, peculiar in being made of corrugated plate. Fox tube†.—flue'ful, a. [Prov. Eng.] Full to the flue; brimful.—flue'less, a.

flue, n. The linty or downy matter that flies or is scraped from cloth, yarn, or wool; flyings; any fine flock-like refuse material or the like. [< OF. flue, < fluer, flow.]

Your tasmony . . . is not worth a tuft of flue.

MACDONALD Weighed and Wanting ch. 5, p. 53. [H.]

[Cp. F. flou, light. < G. flau, weak.]

—flue'y, a. Containing or like flue; downy; fluffy.

flue, n. A fluke or barb, as of a harpoon or anchor.

flued, a. Whaling. Barbed or fluked, as a harpoon.

flue's, n. Rare. Influenza.

flues, n. [Morocco.] A money of account. See COIN.

flue'sholl'er, f.-chamber, etc. See FLUE, 2, n.

flue'sholl'er, n. [Cp. flue, flow.] Shakespeare's Henry V., a pedantic and hot-tempered but brave Welshman.

flu-el'lin, } flū-el'in; 2 flų-ēl'in, n. Bot. 1. Pointed bast-flu-el'lum, } flax, or cancerroot. 2. Rounded-leaved toadflax. 3. The common speedwell. 4. The germander-speedwell. 5. The European mountain-parsley. flu-el'lum†.

—female fluellin, a figwort (Linaria spuria).

flu'el-lite, i. flū'el-ait; 2 flų'ēl-īt, n. Mineral. A vitreous, white, hydrous aluminum fluorid (H$_3$AlF$_5$O), crystallizing in the orthorhombic system. [< FLUOR + -LITE.]

flu'ence†, n. 1. A stream. 2. Fluency.

flu'en-cy, i. flū'ən-si; 2 flų'ən-sy, n. 1. The quality of being fluent, or of readily and easy flow; especially, readiness and ease of speech or expression.

Perhaps St. Paul spoke Aramaic with equal or greater fluency than he spoke Greek himself.

FARRAR St. Paul vol. i, bk. i, ch. 2, p. 10. [S. P. b. 1880.]

2†. Affluence; fullness. [< L. fluentia, < fluens(t-), ppr. of fluo, flow.]

flu'ent, i. flū'ənt; 2 flų'ənt, a. 1. Having a ready or easy flow of words or ideas; speaking or writing with facility; voluble; copious.

Oratory is an accomplishment in which Europeans believe that American women excel, and that this is the opinion of the Americans themselves, although they are too modest to express it, may be gathered from the eagerness they betray when they find an English*man fluent* before an audience.

BRYCE Am. Commonwealth vol. ii, ch. 111, p. 651. [MACM., 1890.]

2. Marked by or proceeding from a facility of speech or writing; flowing; smooth; as, fluent speech. 3. Of a character or consistency adapted to moving or flowing freely; hence, mobile; changeable; as, fluent ideas.

It is only the most liquid that runs out of the mouth of animals and moulds. † BENCH Study of Words lect. v, p. 202. [L. r. a. co. 1888.]

4. Same as FLUENTIAL. [< L. fluen(t-)s; see FLUENCY.]

—flu'ent-ly, adv. In a fluent manner; with easy continuity; as, to converse fluently.—flu'ent-ness, n.

flu'ent, n. 1. Math. In fluxions, the variable quantity, considered as increasing or decreasing. 2†. A stream; flumen.—flu-en'tial, a. Pertaining to a fluent.

flu'ent-ness, n. Fluency. [< FLUENT, a., -NESS.]

fluff', i. flŭf; 2 flŭf, v. I. t. To treat or cover as with fluff or down. 2. To spread, as feathers or down, so as to give an expanded appearance.

II. i. 1. To do such a work as to cause a puffing out, as if of feathers. 2. [Slang, Eng.] (1) To give a shortage of change, as among bookings-clerks. (2) To have a part imperfectly learned, as on the stage.

fluff, n. [< fluff, v.] 1. Soft downy matter not under pressure; flash; as, to fluff gunpowder on a plate.

fluff', n. 1. The nap or down of anything; flue. 2. Anything downy or fluffy. 3. (1) The downy feathers on a fowl's rump. (2) The down near a quill's root. 4. [Slang, Eng.] (1) A shortage of change, as among booking-clerks. (2) Theat. Imperfectly memorized lines, as of a part in a play. [Cp. FLUFF, n.] fluff', n. 1. A flash or slight puffing explosion, as of unconfined gunpowder. [Scot.] A puff; whiff. [Imitative.] —fluff'-gĭb', n. [Scot.] A squib.

fluff'ing, i. fluf'in; 2 flŭf'ing, n. Leather-manuf. The process of smoothing skins on an emery-wheel. —fluff'ing-wheel', n. A wheel used in smoothing skins.

fluff'ment, i. flŭf'ment or -mənt; 2 flŭf'ment, n. 1. Anything loose or light. 2. A bustling manner or fussy style of dress.

fluff'y, i. flŭf'i; 2 flŭf'y, a. [FLUFF'I-ER; FLUFF'I-EST.] 1. Consisting of or covered by down or feathers, specif., in an expanded condition; soft and loose, as down; feathery.

The roof has a protecting slope to it: as one looks at the house, it is like a fluffy old hen with her feathers ruffled up, and the short grass in the sunshine to cover her chickens.

Atlantic Monthly June, 1883, p. 856.

flu'gel, } flū'gel, } flŭg'el, n. [G.] 1. A grand piano. 2. A harpsi-flu'gle, } chord. 3. [Cap.] A Hussite. 4. A hunting-horn; a bugle.

Flü'gel, Johann Gottfried (1^{11}/$_{12}$1788–1855). A German lexicographer and linguist; German-English Dict., etc.

flü'gel-man, i. flü'gel-man; 2 flü'gĭl-man, n. A fugleman.

flugle, i. flū'gl, vi. [SCOT. FLUGLED; FLU'GLING.] To flutter; flicker.

flu'id, i. flū'id; 2 flų'id, a. 1. Composed of particles that move over one another without apparent resistance; capable of flowing; liquid or gaseous; as, the fluid particles of water; fluid lava.

To be round or square, to be solid or fluid, to be great or little, . . . are modes of material existence all equally alien from the nature of the immaterial mind.

JONATHAN EDWARDS Freedom of the Will pt. iv, sec. 3.

2. [Rare.] Flowing; also, fluent with words. [< L. fluidus, < fluo, flow.] —flu'id-com-pressed", a. Compressed while molten and during solidification, as steel.—f. extract, a concentrated solution containing the active principle of a drug; stronger than a tincture.—f. inclusions, minute cavities in crystals, containing water, liquid carbon dioxid, or hydrocarbons.—f. lubrication, lubrication by pressure, pressure of a fluid or resemblance that of a fluid, being invariable and uniform upon all sides.—flu'id-drachm, n. Same as FLUID-DRAM.—f.-dram, n. In weighing, the process of deadening the force of a shot in an oil-well by filling the bore with water.

flu'id, n. 1. A substance that, like water or air, yields to any force however small, that tends to change its form; a liquid (inelastic fluid) or gas (elastic fluid); in common language, always, a liquid. 2. One of several imponderable substances whose existence was formerly assumed to account for phenomena that are now referred to forms of energy; as, the caloric fluid; the electric or magnetic fluid. The term is still employed in the case of electricity, the act necessarily with its former meaning: applied also to the soul by Ulrici.

SYN.: liquid. A liquid is a body in that state in which the particles move freely among themselves, but remain in one mass, keeping the same volume, but taking always the form of the containing vessel; a liquid is an inelastic fluid: a gas is an elastic fluid that tends to expand to the utmost limits of the containing space. All liquids are fluids, but not all fluids are liquids; air and all the gases are fluids, but they are not liquids under ordinary circumstances, the capacities of being reduced to a liquid state by special means, as by cold and pressure. Water at the ordinary temperature is at once a fluid and a liquid.

—flux of a fluid (Physics), the rate of flow through an ideal plane within its mass: usually given in cubic centimeters per second.—Herman's f. (Micros.), a solution of acetic acid, osmic acid, and platinic chlorid, used as a fixative.—Margery's f., copper sulfate in solution, used to preserve timber.—nervous f. (Pathol.), a hypothetical fluid formerly supposed to permeate nervous structures and to be indispensable for nervous action.—Rochelle f. (Pharm.), a mixture composed of one per cent. in volume of formaldehyde with 70 per cent. alcohol, used as a preservative.—Steiner's f., a solution at first made of ammonia, sugar, and water mixed with the ashes of yeast and used in the culture of micro-organisms.—perfect f., a hypothetical fluid that yields immediately and without resistance.—viscous f., a fluid that, like molasses, requires time to flow. Some substances, as shoemakers' wax, that appear to be solids, are really very viscous fluids, for they flow steadily by their own weight, the with extreme slowness. All known fluids, even gases, have some viscosity: no really perfect fluid has been found.—flu'id-al, a. Of or pertaining to a fluid; fluidlike. flu-id'ic.—fluidal structure, see FLOW-STRUCTURE.—flu'id-al-ly, n. [Rare.] In a fluidal or fluid-like manner.—flu-id'i-form, a. 1. Having the form or appearance of a fluid; ethereal. 2. Astral, as used in theosophy.—flu-id'i-fy, v. To convert to a fluid state; make fluid.—flu-id'i-fi-ca'tion, n.—flu-id'i-fi"er, n.—flu'id-ly, adv.

flu'id-ism, i. flū'id-izm; 2 flų'id-izm, n. 1. Occult. The theory that a so-called fluidic body is associated with and surrounds the actual tangible body of living beings, and is capable of producing effects beyond the contact of the solid body: a method of accounting for so-called animal magnetism. 2. Med. A theory attributing disease to changing conditions of the fluids of the body.—flu id-ist, n. One who adopts a fluid in his hypothesis; specif., one who adopts fluidism in either sense.

flu'id-i-ty, i. flū'id-i-ti; 2 flų'id-i-ty, n. The state or quality of being fluid; as, the fluidity of the air. flu'id-ness†.

2. [Rare.] The quality of flowing smoothly and evenly, as language; fluency. flu'id-ness (see par. 1).

Instead of the fluidity of Chaucer's manner, the manner of Burns has spring, bounding swiftness. MATTHEW ARNOLD Essays in Criticism second series, Burns, p. 200. [MACM., 1883.]

flu'i-gram, i. flū'i-gram; 2 flų'ĭ-gram, n. One cubic centimeter. [< FLUID + GRAM.] flu'i-grammet.

flu'ing, i. flū'in; 2 flų'ing, n. The splay of a window-jamb.

flu'ing, i. flū'-ing; 2 flų'-ing, n. Bot. Floating, as an aquatic plant. [< L. fluito, ppr. fluitan(t-)s, float, < fluo, flow.]

fluke, i. flūk; 2 flųk, n. [FLUKER; FLUK'ING.] Whaling.

I. t. To cut off or disable the flukes of; also, to secure, as a dead whale, by a chain or rope around the body near the flukes. II. i. To use the flukes in swimming, as a whale.

fluke', n. [Slang.] In competitions or games of skill, as billiards and pool, to score by accident; scratch; hence, to achieve or get anything by luck. [< FLUKE'S, a.] fluke', n. 1. The part of an anchor that catches on the bottom and holds; palm. See illus. under ANCHOR. 2. One of the lobes of the tail of a whale: named from its shape. 3. One of the barbs on the head of a harpoon or lance-iron; fluc. 4. A tool for enlarging a blast-hole. 5. [Local, Eng.] An automatic attachment in the furnace which dips into the revolving calciners and spreads and mixes the arsenopyrite in the production of arsenic. [Perhaps connected with fluke, flat, fluke of an anchor, wing. < fliegen, fly.]—fluke'-chain", n.—rope, n. A chain or rope used in fluking a whale.—f.-spade, n. A spade-shaped cleaver used in cutting off a whale's flukes.—mushroom f., the hemispherical or flat-topped part of a mushroom anchor. See ANCHOR, fig. 4.—fluk'y‡, a. Having flukes; fluke-shaped.

fluke', n. 1. A parasitic trematode worm, as the liver-fluke of sheep, the cause of the destructive disease known as rot, or the bilharzia. Flukes have a flattened leaflike body provided with suckers, usually two. They mostly infest the internal organs of warm-blooded animals, but are also found on the gills and other parts of the exterior of fishes, etc. Compare ROT.

Fluke-disease or rot . . . is caused by flat, leaf-shaped parasites, Distomum hepaticum, which, after having been swallowed with food or water, migrate to the liver and destroy the substance of that organ. The eggs deposited by the flukes are carried out with the manure, but the embryos that are hatched from them must pass a period in certain snails (Limnæus truncatulus), and another stage in the water bugs in which they are found infesting sheep. T. A. KLEIN in BAILEY'S Cyc. of Am. Agriculture vol. iii, p. 604. [MACM., '03.]

2. [Irish.] A flatfish, or flounder, especially Pleuronectes flesus. [< AS. fluc, a kind of plaice.] —bronchial fluke, same as LUNG-FLUKE. —cat-f., n. A trematode (Opisthorchis felineus), lodging in the liver and producing the disease known as opisthorchiasis in cats and dogs. —lung-fluke, including man.—fluke'worm", n. Same as FLUKE', n., 1.—fluke'wort", n. A British species of pennywort (Hydrocotyle vulgaris) commonly accidental in sheep's livers.—Indian liver-f., an East-Indian fluke (Opisthorchis noverca) about ½ inch in length, affecting men and dogs.—lung-f., n. A fluke (Distoma ringeri) infesting the lungs of animals.—fluke'less, a.

fluke', n. 1. [Slang.] A lucky stroke in billiards or pool; a chance score; any lucky or accidental gain. 2. A fluke; fasseo; as, the yacht-race was a fluke for want of wind.—fluk'y‡, a.—fluk'i-ly, adv.—fluk'i-ness, n.

fluke, n. [Prov. Eng.] 1. Cotton waste. 2. A lock of hair.

fluke, n. [Jer.] 1. A little more or less; a trifle. 2. Nothing.

fluked, a. 1. Due to luck rather than skill. 2. Infected with flukes, as sheep or cattle.

fluk'ing, i. flŭk'ing, pa. [Colloq.] Naut. Running before the wind, as a yacht sailing fast with the aid of a strong breeze: commonly a-fluking or all fluking.

flum, i. flŭm; 2 flŭm, n. [Scot. & Prov. Eng.] 1. Flummery; blancmange. 2. Deceit; flattery.

flum'a-did"dle, i. flŭm'a-did"l; 2 flŭm'ə-did"l, n. 1. [SLANG, U. S.] Nonsense; humbug. 2. [Local, U. S.] A mess composed of salt pork, molasses, bread, and spices, mixed into a cake. flum'ma-dad"dle‡.

flume, i. flūm; 2 flųm. [FLUMED; FLUM'ING.], v. I. t. 1. Mining. To drain away or divert by means of a flume, as the water of a stream. 2. To move by means of a flume, as logs. II. i. To build or work a flume.

flume, n. 1. A conduit, usually a wooden structure, for conveying water to be utilized, as for a mill-wheel or an ore-washer.

And the great wheel that tolls amid the hurry
LONGFELLOW Flower-de-Luce st. 2.

2. [U. S.] A narrow passage or gap through which a torrent passes. 3. A chute. 4†. A river. 5. [OF. flume, < L. fumen, < fuo, flow.] — flume's car, n. A car that travels along an open flume. It has wheels resting on the edges of the sides of the flume, and it is propelled against the direction of the water by the current acting upon the floats of a water-wheel on the side. — rating f., a rectangular conduit in an irrigating canal designed to register the flow of water. — by the f. [slang] W. U. S.], dead; vanished; departed.

Flume Mountain. An elevation in New Hampshire; 4,340 ft. high.

flum'ing, 1 flūm'iŋ; 2 flųm'iŋg, n. 1. The diversion of a stream by means of a flume for placer-mining. 2. A modern aqueduct.

flu'mi-nous, 1 flū'mi-nus, 2 flų'mi-nŭs, a. Of or pertaining to rivers; watered by streams. [< L. flumen (flumin-); see FLUME.]

flum'mer, 1 flum'ėr; 2 flŭm'er, st. [Prov. Eng. or Obs.] To beguile; humbug; cheat.

flum'mer, 1 flum'ėr; 2 flŭm'er, n. [Obs.] To bewilder; embarrass; perplex. II. t. [U. S.] To give up or give out; tail. flum'mox'.

flump, 1 flump; 2 flŭmp, [Colloq.] I. vt. & vi. To throw down heavily or clumsily; flop; plump. II. n. The act of flumping or the sound so produced. [Onomatopoetic.]

flung, 1 flųŋ; 2 flŭng, imp. & pp. of FLING, v.

flunk, 1 flųnk; 2 flŭnk, v. [Slang, U. S.] I. t. 1. To make a failure of; shirk; as, to flunk a recitation. 2. To cause to fail. II. i. To break down; fail utterly; back down or out; as, he flunked in the examination. [Perhaps a form of FUNK², n.; cp. Old Flem. fonck, agitation.] — flunk'er, n.

flunk, n. [Slang, U. S.] A complete failure; a giving up or backing out; disgraceful retreat.

flunk'y, 1 flųnk'i; 2 flŭnk'i, [Slang, U. S.] — FUNK'IES, 1 -iz; 2 -iş.

flunk'ey, y pl.] 1. An obsequious or fawning fellow; a servile imitator or flatterer; toady. 2. (1) [Colloq.] A servant in livery, as a footman: used contemptuously. (2) A table servant in construction camps. 3. [U. S.] A foolish, inexperienced speculator: formerly commercial slang.

The lambs that we have in the Street these days were called flunkies when I was on Change, some forty-five or fifty years ago. New-York Tribune (Mar. 2, 1893, p. 4, col. 5.

[Allied to FLANK, v.] — flunk'y-dom, n. A community of flunkies; the condition of being a flunky. flunk'ey-domi. — flunk'y-hood, n. flunk'ey-hood. — flunk'y-ish, a. flunk'ey-ishi. — flunk'y-ism, n. The character of a flunky; worship of rank or wealth; toadyism. flunk'ey-ismt.

This action of the English Societies did in effect strike a damp like death through the heart of flunkeyism universally in this world. CARLYLE Cromwell vol. 1, pt. iv, p. 308. [n.]

— flunk'y-ls'tic, a. flunk'ey-istt. — flunk'y-ite, n. flunk'ey-itet. [like a flunky. flunk'ey-izet.

flunk'y-ize, 1 flųnk'i-aiz; 2 flųnk'y-iz, vt. [Rare.] To make flu'o-,] 1 flū'o-, flū'or-; 2 flų'ō-, flų'ōr-, Chem. From flu'or,] FLUOR: combining forms indicating either combination with fluorin, or fluorescence. — flu'o-a-lu'mi-nate, n. Chem. A compound of aluminum fluorid with a fluorid of a metal, such as sodium. flu'or-a-lu'mi-nate. — flu'o-am'mo-nate, n. Chem. A compound of a fluorid and an arsenate. — flu'o-ben'zene, n. Chem. A colorless benzene derivative (C_6H_5F) formed by substituting an atom of fluorin for one of hydrogen. — flu'o-bo'rate, n. Same as FLUOBORID. — flu'o-bo'ric, a. Chem. Pertaining to or combined with fluorin and boron. — bo'ro-flu'or-ic, a. — flu'or-bo'ric. — flu'or-hy'dric, a. — flu'or-hy'dric. — flu'or-hy'drate, n. A compound of hydrofluoric acid with a more electropositive metal fluorid. — flu'o-phos'phate, n. A double salt of hydrofluoric and phosphoric acids.

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

flu'or, 1 flū'or; 2 flų'ōr, n. 1. Mineral. A cleavable, vitreous, variously colored, transparent to subtranslucent, brittle calcium fluorid, phosphorescing when heated, and crystallizing in the isometric system.

The fluor of Chamouni is rose-coloured, and in octahedrons, while the fluor of Weardale is green, and in cubes.
RUSKIN Ethics of the Dust vii, p. 75, n. 2 s. co. 1867.]

2†. A liquid state. 3†. A menstrual flux. [LL., < L. fluo, flow.] — fluor albus (Pathol.), leucorrhea.

flu'or-ad'e-lite, n. Same as FLUADELITE. [< FLUOR- + Gr. ἀδῆλος, concealed.] — flu'or-am'id, n. Chem. An oily, explosive, liquid compound, obtained from ammonium fluorid by anhydrous evaporation. flu'or-a-mide. — flu'or-an'thene, n. Chem. A crystalline anhydrid ($C_{32}H_{18}O_3$), fluorescing in solution, formed as a by-product in making phenolphthalein. flu'or-anet. — flu'or-an'thin, n. Chem. A complex crystalline compound ($C_{15}H_{14}$) contained in the higher fractions of coal-tar. — flu'or-ap'a-tite, n. Mineral. Apatite in which fluorin but little or no chlorin is present. — flu'or-ate, n. A salt of fluoric acid; a fluorid. — flu'or-at'ed, pa. Chem. Combined or treated with hydrofluoric acid or fluorin. — flu'or-ben'zene, n. Same as FLUOBENZENE. — flu'or-ene, n. Chem. A white, crystalline compound ($C_{13}H_{10}$) with violet fluorescence when impure, contained in coal-tar. flu'o-rescet, 1 flū'o-res'; 2 flų'ō-reş', vt. Physics. To become fluorescent; exhibit fluorescence. — flu'o-res'ce'n, n. flu'o-res'ce-in, 1 flū'o-res'i-in; 2 flų'ō-reş'e-in, n. Chem. A dark-red crystalline compound ($C_{20}H_{12}O_5$), obtained by heating phthalic anhydrid with resorcin at 200° C., and subsequent separation. It dyes silk and wool yellow, but it is seldom used, as the colors are not fast. See quotation under FLUORESCENCE. flu'o-res'ce-line†.

flu'o-res'cence, 1 flū'o-res'ens; 2 flų'ō-reş'ŋg, n. Physics. 1. The property, possessed by some bodies, of giving off, when illuminated, light of a color differing from their own and from that of the incident light. The light given off is usually of greater wave-length than the incident light, and the violet and ultra-violet rays are the best exciters of it.

Its alkaline solution [that of fluorescein] possesses a . . . green fluorescence . . . so intense that 1 part dissolved in alkali, and diluted with 2,000,000 parts of water, still shows a fluorescence.
ROSCOE AND KNECHT Chemistry of Coal-Tar Colours, Pathelicins p. 162.

2. The light resulting from this property; as, the blue fluorescence of a solution of sulfate of quinin. — fluorescence absorption, the additional absorption of light by a substance when it has been rendered fluorescent.

flu'o-res'cent, 1 flū'o-res'ent; 2 flų'ō-reş'ent, a. Showing or produced by fluorescence. — fluorescent lamp, a lamp consisting of a glass bulb coated on the interior with a tungstate or the like, which exhibits fluorescence when an electric discharge of high potential is passed through it.

flu'o-res'et-ge'nic, a. Producing or promoting fluorescence: said of certain bacteria. — flu'o-res-cig'e-nous, a. Able to induce fluorescence, as ultra-violet rays and cathode rays.

flu'o-res'tin, 1 flū'o-res'tin; 2 flų'ō-reş'tin, n. Chem. A white amorphous compound ($C_{28}H_{16}O_2$) formed by reducing fluorescein. flu'o-res'cine†.

flu-or'ic, 1 flū-or'ik; 2 flų-ōr'ik, a. Chem. Pertaining to or derived from fluorin or fluor. — fluoric acid, see HYDRO-FLUORIC ACID.

flu'o-rid,] 1 flū'o-rid, -rid or -raid; 2 flų'o-rid, -rid or -raid, flu'o-ride,] -rid (XIII), n. Chem. A binary compound of fluorin: sometimes regarded as a salt of hydrofluoric acid. flu'or-atet. — sodium fluorid, shining crystals (NaF) soluble in water, used in malaria and epilepsy.

flu'o-rim'e-try, 1 flū'o-rim'e-tri; 2 flų'ō-rim'e-tri, n. Mineral. The conversion of other minerals into fluorid.

flu'o-rin,] 1 flū'o-rin, -rin or -rin; 2 flų'o-rin, -rin or flu'o-rine,] -rin, n. Chem. A pale-greenish gaseous element. See ELEMENTS. [< FLUOR, 1.]

Fluorine is the only element known which forms no compound with oxygen. ELIOT AND STORER Inorganic Chemistry ch. 5, § 98, p. 66. h. e. 1874.

flu'or-in'dln,] 1 flū'or-in'din, -din or -din; 2 flų'ōr-in'din, flu'or-in'dine,] -din or -din, n. Org. Chem. A class of crystalline, complex dyestuffs, generally green, showing a red fluorescence in alcoholic solution, and a weak basic character. — flu'or-in'do-sty'ril, $C_{28}H_{18}N_4$. [< FLUORIDE + INDIGO.]

flu'or-ize, 1 flū'or-aiz; 2 flų'ōr-iz, vt. To measure fluorin in a compound. — flu'or-o-form, n. Chem. A volatile liquid (CHF_3) of high specific gravity, analogous to chloroform and possessing similar properties. It corrodes glass and etches etching glass. — flu'or-o-o'for'mol, n. A watery solution of fluoroform used in tuberculosis and lupus. fluoroform water, — flu'or-o-gen, n. Chem. The methyl group, CH_3, found with hydrofluoric acid. — flu'or-old, n. Crystal. A tetrahexahedron. — flu'or-ol, n. Same as SODIUM FLUORID. — flu'or-pho'ra, n. A base ($C_{13}H_{13}N$) present in paraffin oil, obtained from lignite coal-tar. flu'or-o-phore†. — flu'or-ome'ter, n. A device for estimating the fluorin in combination by treating the given substance and powdered quartz with sulfuric acid and measuring the resulting tetrafluorid. — flu'or-o-phore, n. Chem. An atomic group in a molecule, as certain ring structures, supposed to be the cause of fluorescence.

flu'or-o-scope, 1 flū'or-o-skōp; 2 flų'ōr-o-seōp, n. A device for observing the shadows of objects cast by Roentgen rays, or of bodies that in different parts transmit rays of different degrees. It usually consists of a box, shaped at one end to fit around the eyes and exclude light, while the opposite end is closed by a screen covered with some slightly fluorescent substance, such as platino-barium cyanid, or calcium tungstate. The object to be examined is placed on the outside between a source of Roentgen rays and the fluorescent screen. The rays penetrate different parts of the object in different degrees, and falling upon the crystals excite a fluorescent light which is less where a shadow is denser and vice versa, and this shadow is readily visible to the eye when looking through the box. [< FLUOR- + -SCOPE.] — flu'or-o-scop'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or conducted by means of a fluoroscope. — flu'or-os'co-py, n. The use of the fluoroscope in examination conducted by means of a fluoroscope; cryloscopy.

flu'or-o-type, 1 flū'or-o-taip; 2 flų'ōr-o-tīp, n. A photographic process in which a sensitive film is employed.

flu'or-ous, 1 flū'or-us; 2 flų'ōr-ŭs, a. Chem. Derived from or combined with fluorin.

flu'or-spar', 1 flū'or-spār'; 2 flų'ōr-speār', n. Same as FLUOR, 1.

flu'or-sul'phu-ric, a. Chem. Of hydrosulfuric acid: also, by extension, in mineralogy, a silicate containing fluorin. — flu'o-si-lic'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing fluorin and silicon. — flu'o-sil'i-cate, n. Chem. A colorless suffocating gaseous compound ($SiF_4.2HF$) formed by the action of hydrofluoric acid on silica. — flu'o-sul-ton'ic, a. Chem. Of or pertaining to a weak, colorless acid ($HSbF_6$) obtained from sulfur trioxid or hydrofluoric acid. — flu'o-tan'ta-late, n. A salt made by combining the salts of tantalum and of other metals. — flu'o-tan'tic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing fluorin and tantalum. — fluotantalic acid, a compound formed by the action of hydrofluoric acid on a salt of tantalum. — flu'or-tan'ate, n. A salt of fluotantalic acid. — flu'o-tet'ra-hed'ron, n. Chem. Pertaining to or containing titanium and fluorin. — fluotitanic acid, a compound (H_2TiF_6) formed by the action of hydrofluoric acid on a salt of titanium. — flu'o-zir'con-ate, n. A salt resulting from the combination of oxids with zirconium fluorid.

flur, 1 flūr; 2 flųr, n. [Prov. Eng.] To sneer.

flurr, 1 flūr; 2 flųr, n. [Rare.] I. t. To throw; toss; as, a ship flurrs spray. II. i. To whirr; flutter.

flur'ried, 1 flur'id; 2 flŭr'id, pa. Confused; agitated.

flur'ry, 1 flur'i; 2 flŭr'i, n. pl. FLUR'RIES; FLUR'RY-ING.] To bewilder or confuse, as by haste; agitate; fluster.

Poor Jemima trotted off, exceedingly furried and nervous.
THACKERAY Vanity Fair ch. 1, p. 10. [n. 1876.]

— flur'ried-ly, adv. With flurry; in a flurried manner.

flur'ry, n. [-RIES, 1 -iz; 2 -iş, pl.] 1. A sudden commotion or excitement; a state of perturbation; nervous agitation; flutter; hurry; as, a flurry on 'change; all in a flurry. 2. A brief agitation of the air; a light gust or squall.

We therefore trusted ourselves to the mercy of the waves, and in about half an hour that was overset by a sudden flurry from the north.
SWIFT Works, Gulliver pt. i, ch. 1, p. 114. [w. n. s. 1871.]

3. A transient confused movement of light objects or particles; as, a flurry of dry leaves; a flurry of snow. 4. Whaling. The spasmodic contortions of a dying whale. 5. The scum which gathers upon indigo-blue in the dye-vat. [< Sw. flurig, disordered, dissolute.]

flush, 1 flųsh; 2 flŭsh, v. I. t. 1. To cause to color, as with a rush of blood; redden suddenly; as, wine had flushed his face.

The lights of sunset fall: Flushing the warm and crimson air.
LETITIA E. LANDON The Unknown Grave st. 1.

II. i. To become overspread with color; grow red in the face; glow; hence, to bloom; as, he flushed angrily. [Mlb. Flusen, redden, < Sw. flossa, flame; cp. FLASH, v.] flush, 2, v. I. t. 1. To deluge with water; wash out by a flow of water, as a sewer. 2. To flood intermittently with water, as a placer-mine.

II. i. 1. To flow and spread suddenly; become suffused; rush; as, the blood flushes in his veins. 2. To become filled as with water; as, the pipes flush readily. [Form of FLASH², v.] flush, v. I. t. To drive from cover; cause to take wing: said of gamebirds; as, to flush a covey of quail.

My spaniels worked the bush thoroughly as we proceeded along the route, occasionally flushing two or three red-legged partridges. BAKER Cyprus ch. 5, p. 103. [MACM. 1879.]

II. i. To fly up suddenly, as birds when alarmed. [MIr. flusshen, for flyschen, strike against; cp. FLISK, v., a var. of FRISK, v.]

flush†, vt. To encourage and excite, as with success; elate: chiefly in the past participle. Compare FLESH.

flush, vt. 1. To make flush or even; fill up to the level of a surface: often with up; as, to flush up a joint in masonry. 2. To pass (a filling-thread) over several warp-threads, as in twill-weaving; float.

flush, n. [Prov. Eng.] A young bird, esp. a fledgling.

flush†, vt. Arch. 1. To crumble under overweight, as a stone, at the edges. 2. To squeeze out from joints, as cement by excessive pressure.

flush†, a. 1. Having the surfaces in the same plane; adjusted to a correct level; even; as, a flush door-frame. 2. Naut. Of or pertaining to a ship with a flush deck. [< FLUSH†, a., filled up even.] — flush box, a box set flush with the surface of a road-bed, above and connected with a conduit, for convenience in getting at conductors, etc., in an underground electric system of cars. f. deck, an uninterrupted deck extending in one level from stem to stern. — flush'-riv'et-ed, a. Having its rivet-heads not projecting beyond its surface: said of the hull of an iron vessel.

flush†, a. 1. Quite full; copious; abounding. 2. Specif., abundantly supplied with money; spending freely.

Speaking in the fashion of the street, sometimes Mr. Rosenstein was flush, and sometimes he was very, very dry.
E. E. HALE Ups and Downs ch. 14, p. 150. [n. bros. 1884.]

flush, a. 1. Full of life; vigorous; blooming. 2. Powerful and direct, as a blow.

Both appeared quite flush and confident of victory.
HENRY BROOKS ADAMS The Feud of Anxiety vol. 1, p. 143. [NYC.]

3. [Prov. Eng.] Sultry; heavy, as the atmosphere. [< FLUSH†, v.] flush, a. [Prov. Eng.] Full-fledged; feathered.

flush†, n. 1. A heightening of color or reddening; warm glow or coloring; blush; as, the flush deepened in her cheek; the sunset flush. 2. An access of sudden elation or excitement; animation; thrill; as, a flush of joy. 3. A blooming or healthy appearance. 4. A new growth having leaves large enough to pick. 5. [Prov. Eng.] The hot stage in intermittent fever. — hectic flush (Pathol.), same as HECTIC, n. 2.

flush, n. 1. The act of flushing a bird; a bird or a flock of birds startled from cover.

flush, n. In poker, cribbage, or piquet, a hand of cards all of one suit; used also attributively; as, a flush hand or player. [< OF. flux, < L. fluxus; see FLUX, n.] — bobtail flush, in poker, a hand that lacks one card of being a flush. — four f., a bobtail flush. — monkey f., in poker, four cards of the same number or denomination. — royal flush headed by the ace. — straight f., in poker, a flush that is also a straight or sequence.

flush†, n. 1. A sudden gush or rush of water. 2. [Scot.] A dissolving mass of snow; a slush. (2) A morass; bog. (3) A watercourse; run. 3. [Prov. Eng.] A rise of water in a stream; flood. — flush'board', n. A board or plank placed on a dam to increase the water-supply. — f.-box, n. Same as FLUSHING-BOX. — f.-tank. — f.-gate, n. A gate or valve which may be opened to flush a pipe or a channel. — f.-rim, n. A hopper-rim in a water-closet so made as to allow water to flow from it at once for flushing. — f.-wheel, n. An ancient form of waterwheel; noria.

flush†, n. 1. Abundance. 2. [Prov. Eng.] A large number. [< FLUSH†, v.] flush†, n. A surface which is flush.

flush, adv. 1. With level, unbroken surface or form. 2. In a direct manner; squarely; straight.

flush, v. [Prov. Eng.] I. t. To wash; as, a person who cleans sewers by flushing. flush'er-man†. 2. An apparatus made to throw radiating streams of water, used to flush sewers. 3. [Local, Eng.] The red-backed shrike.

flush'ing, 1 flųsh'iŋ; 2 flŭsh'iŋg, n. The act of drenching or washing out. — flush'ing-box', n. A cistern or box for supplying water-closets or urinals with a sudden rush of water. — f.-rim, n. Same as FLUSH-RIM.

flush'ing², n. 1. [Eng.] A thick, coarse shoddy cloth. 2. Weaving. Same as FLOATING.

flush'ing³, n. Same as FLASHING.

flush'ing-ly, 1 flųsh'iŋ-li; 2 flŭsh'iŋg-ly, adv. With a flush; in a flushing manner.

flush'ness, 1 flųsh'nes; 2 flŭsh'nĕs, n. Fulness; abundance.

flush-om'e-ter, 1 flųsh-om'i-tėr; 2 flŭsh-om'e-ter, n. A gauge for water as applied to accomplish all the flushing in a building from one tank.

flush'y, a. Having a flush.

flusk, 1 flųsk; 2 flŭsk, vi. [Prov. Eng.] 1. To fly out abruptly. 2. To quarrel. [Cp. FLISK.] — flusk'er, vt. [Prov. Eng.] 1. To fly unsteadily or irregularly. 2. To be flustered.

flus'ter, 1 flųs'tėr; 2 flŭs'ter, v. I. t. 1. To throw into a flurried or confused state; cause to lose presence of mind; flurry; as, nothing ever flustered him. 2. To flush or befuddle with drink; make tipsy.

But a matter of four pints [of wine] now flusters me.
SCOTT Quentin Durward ch. 26, p. 323. [D. P. & CO.]

II. i. 1. [Rare.] To be or become flurried, heated, or agitated. 2. To act blusteringly. [< Ice. flaustra, be flustered, flaustr, fluster, hurry.] Syn.: see AGITATE.

flus'ter, n. A confused or agitated state of mind; flurry; also, excitement caused by drink; as, she was helpless with anxiety and fluster. flus'trum‡ [Colloq.].

flus'ter-er, 1 flŭs'ter-ər; 2 flŭs'ter-er, n. [Local, U. S.] The American coot.

flus'ter-y, 1 flŭs'ter-ɪ; 2 flŭs'ter-y, a. [S. U. S.] Flustered; agitated; confused.

flus'trate, 1 flŭs'trāt; 2 flŭs'trāt, n. pl. [FLUS'TRAT-ED; FLUS'TRAT-ING.] [Colloq.] To fluster; befuddle. flus'ter-ate.

—flus'ter'ion, flus-tra'tion, n. flus'ter-ment, n.

Flus-trel'li-dæ, 1 flus-trĕl'ɪ-dē; 2 flus-trĕl'ɪ-dē, n. pl. Helminth. A family of ctenostomatous polyzoans with zooecia embedded in a gelatinous crust. Flus-trel'la, n. (t. g.)

Flus'trid-æ, 1 flŭs'trɪ-dē; 2 flŭs'trɪ-dē, n. pl. Helminth. A family of cellulariadan polyzoans, especially those having the zooecia membranaceous in front and without a raised border, the avicularia vicarious, and the zoarium expanded.

Flus'tra, n. (t. g.) [Cp. AS. flustrian, plait, weave.]—flus'trid, n.— Flus-tri'na, n. pl. Helminth. A subdivision of radicellate polyzoans, including Flustridæ, Membraniporidæ, etc.—flus'trine, a.— flus'troid, a. Of or pertaining to the Flustridæ.

flute, 1 flūt; 2 flut, n. [FLUT'ED; FLUT'ING.] I. t. 1. To play, sing, or utter with flute-like tones. 2. To form parallel channels, grooves, or flutings in; provide with flutings; corrugate; crimp; as, to flute a column.

II. i. To play on a flute; produce a flute-like sound, as with the voice.

Sometimes a bob-bird fluted far away.
MRS. J. G. WILSON The Forty-Mile Bush st. 1.

flute's, n. 1. A tubular windinstrument of small diameter in which the vibrations of tone are produced by opening and closing holes along the sides.

The modern orchestral, German, transverse, or cross flute is sounded by blowing into a hole in the side of the tube near the upper end or head; the fipple or beaked flute is sounded by means of a mouthpiece in the end of the tube, as in the flageolet. Some ancient flutes consisted of two tubes. These pierced the underlip and blew on the edge of three octaves, with all the semitones. Its peculiarly sweet and mellow tone is practically simple, the fundamental being accompanied by very few and distinguishable upper partials. The older, or conical form, now used principally in military bands, has a cylindrical head-joint, the remainder of the instrument tapering gradually toward the foot. The modern type has a hand-piece with closed keys, invented by Boehm in 1832, the other three-fourths being cylindrical. It has a system of rings and levers combined with keys to facilitate fingering.

2. A flute-stop in an organ; flue. 3. Arch. A concave groove, usually of semicircular section, and separated from those on each side by a narrow fillet; a fluting, as in a column or pilaster of the Doric and Corinthian orders. Compare CHANNEL (Doric).

Here and there a flute, a pedestal, a cornice, a column not quite broken.—BISHOP SOUTH Sermons ser. i, p. 3, Ed. lxi. a. c. 1839.]

4. A corrugation; orinarily, one of a series. 5. Same as FLUTING, 6. 5. A shuttle used in tapestry-looms. 6. An elongated French breakfast roll. 7. A tall, slender wine-glass. 8. Founding. A molders' tool for making grooves. 9. [Slang, Eng.] Opf. flatte, < flatter, blow, prob. < L. flatus; see FLATULENT.] —ancient flute, same as DOUBLE FLUTE.— bass'-flute", n. Organ-building. An 8-foot flute-stop having a full, rich tone. —clarinet-a. Mus. An organ-stop somewhat resembling a clarinetta and of the same pitch as a flute-stop.— corno-d., n. A manual 8-foot organ-stop of a very soft tone.— double f., a flute consisting of two distinct tubes united into one mouthpiece. —flute à bec, a beaked flute. See note to def. 1.— flute's bird", n. [Austral.] The piping crow (Gymnorhina tibicen).—f.-bit, n. A bit having holes in hard woods such as those used for wind-instruments, having two lips and a square seating. Great use in point.—f.-douce, Capitoline Muse. 1. An ancient seam. Rome, high relief. 2. African flute, flute provided used in Wyanda. 4. Manner of playing the with a mouth-piece. 3. Same as FLUTE-SCREW.— f.-glass†, n. A tall wine-glass.— flute'mouth", n. An autostomoid fish.— f.-pipe, n. An organ-flue of flute quality.— f.-player, n. 1. A flutist. 2. A South-American wren (genus Cyphorhinus).— f.-shrike, n. A gaudy African shrike (genus Lanarius).

—f.-stop, n. A stop of flute quality and usually of four-foot pitch in an organ flue-pipe.— f.-tool, n. Same as FLUTING-TOOL.— f. traverse(s), a cross flute. See note to def. 1.— f.-work, n. In organ-building, flue-work.— German f., the transverse or modern flute.— hohl'flute", n. A flute-stop in an organ giving a deep, full, hollow tone, using open pipes of 8-foot pitch.— onion f., a musical toy of a round-ish form, as the kazoo.— Swiss f. 1. A flute-stop having open metal pipes of penetrating tone. 2†. Same as FLUTE-GLASS.— traverse f. (Mus.), the transverse flute.— flute'like, a.— flut'ist, n. A small three-holed flute of a primitive type, resembling a piccolo-pipe; galoubet.— flut'y, a. Resembling a flute in tone.

The Dutch were fortunate in getting aboard the flute 'la Marie.' KINGSFORD Canada vol. iv, bk. xiv, ch. 4, p. 375. [n. & n. 1890.]

2. A war-vessel without full equipment, used as a transport or store-ship. [< F. flûte, store-ship, < D. fluit, a kind of vessel.]

flut'ed, 1 flūt'ed; 2 flut'ĕd, pa. 1. Exhibiting parallel grooves or flutes; furrowed; as, a fluted column; a fluted ruffle; a fluted reamer. Compare CHANNELED. 2. Having a shrill quality or tone of a flute; mellow.

The koil's fluted song, the bulbul's hymn.
EDWIN ARNOLD Light of Asia bk. vi, st. 26.

flut'er, 1 flūt'er, 2 flut'er, n. 1. One who plays the flute. 2. One who makes fluted work.

fluth'er, 1 flŭth'er, 2 flŭth'er, n. [Sco.] 1. Bustle; confusion. 2. A confusing superfluity.

flu-ti'na, 1 flū-tī'nə; 2 flu-tī'na, n. Mus. An instrument of the accordion class, having lever fingerpieces. [< FLUTE¹, n.] flut'ing, 1 flūt'ɪng; 2 flut'ing, n. 1. Arch. A flute. 2. A similar groove cut spirally, as on a baluster or ornamental support. 3. A flute-shaped crimp, as in a woman's ruffle. 4. A lengthwise channel in a screw-cutting tap, or a reamer. 5. Flutes collectively; fluted work; as, the fluting of a column of the. 6. The act of making a flute, as by carving a column or crimping a dress-trimming. 7. Flute-like shading, as of a design. 8. A series of appearances produced by shading as in a spectrum.— flut'ing-cyl'in-der, n. A lengthwise corrugated roll in a fluting-machine.— f.-iron, n. 1. A laundry iron with corrugated surfaces for goffering or crimping. 2. An implement for goffering-iron. 2†. Of plain-scissors.— f.-machine, n. 1. A machine having grooved cylinders for fluting fabrics or sheet metal. 2. A fluting-lathe.— f.-plane, n. A carpenters' plane used in fluting wood. —f.-scissors, n. pl. Scissors-blades open-ing like a pair of scissors, having on one side two prongs between which a single prong on the other side presses a piece of fabric to form a crimp.— magnestum f., the fluted spectrum of magnesium.

A Fluting-Iron.

flut'ist, 1 flūt'ist; 2 flut'ist, n. One who plays on the flute.

flut'ter, 1 flŭt'er; 2 flŭt'er, v. I. t. 1. To cause to move rapidly and irregularly to and fro; agitate; vibrate; as, to flutter the wings.

I waved a handkerchief to them, and one of them . . . fluttered something white in return.
BLACK Kilmeny ch. 22, p. 194. [n. 1877.]

2. To throw into an agitated state; flurry; fluster.

II. i. 1. To vibrate with rapid irregular motions; move rapidly and irregularly; swing or flap quickly; be agitated; as, fluttering hair; a heart fluttered feebly.

Our pine flag fluttering still.
BRET HARTE Off Scarborough st. 9.

2. To make the wings vibrate rapidly; hover or move with or as with quivering, beating motion of the wings. 3. To move lightly and fitfully; behave with levity or inconstancy; trifle. 4. To quiver or tremble with excitement or uncertainty. [< AS. flotorian (freq.); cp. FLOAT, v. 1, FLOTE, AGOTE, FLOTTER.]—flut'ter-ment, n. [Local, U. S.] A toy water-wheel, either overshot or undershot.— f.-wheel, n. A water-wheel at the lower end of a chute, having rapidly and with a fluttering motion.

—flut'ter-a-ble, a.—flut'ter-a'tion, n.— flut'ter-er, n. flut'ter-ing-ly, adv.— flut'ter-ment, n. [Local, U. S.] A fluttering agitation; fluster.— flut'ter-y, a. Inclined to flutter; unsteady.— flut'ter-stomet.

flut'ter, n. 1. The act of fluttering; vibration of the wings with rapid irregular motion; any rapid, irregular, or uncertain vibration. 2. An agitated state; confusion or tumultuous emotion; as, a flutter of excitement. 3. The passage of mingled steam and water, as from the gage-cocks of a boiler. 4. Fluctuation in stocks. 5. A spasmodic effort or burst of speed, as of a hunted animal. 6. Betting or gambling. 7†. Show; ostentation.— flut'ter-less, a.

Flut'ter, Sir Fopling. In Etherege's The Man of Mode, the chief character; a simpering dandy.

flut'y-ing, n. Fluting.

S. S.

Flu-van'na, 1 flū-van'ə; 2 flu-vān'a, n. A county in central Virginia; 289 sq. m.; county-seat, Palmyra.

flu'vi-al, 1 flū'vɪ-əl; 2 flu'vi-al, a. Of or pertaining to rivers or streams; formed by a river; as, fluvial navigation; fluvial deposits. [< L. fluvialis, < fluvius, river, < fluo, flow.]— flu'vi-al-ist, n. One who explains geological phenomena, to a great extent, by the action of streams.

Flu'vi-a'les, 1 flū'vɪ-ā'lēz; 2 flu'vi-ā'lēs, n. pl. Bot. A group of aquatic plants proposed by Ventinat, embracing the orders Typhaceæ, Alismaceæ, and Hydrocharidaceæ. [< L. fluvio, flow.]

flu'vi-a-tile, 1 flū'vɪ-ə-tīl; 2 flu'vi-a-tīl, a. Growing near or belonging to rivers or fresh water; caused or produced by the action of a river; fluvial.

The rate of the fluviatile deposit [of the Nile valley] is from three to five inches in a century.
LYELL Prin. Geol. Amer. Mist. pt. i, p. 15. [n. & co. 1888.]

Flu'vi-co-il'ne, 1 flū'vɪ-ko-īel'nɪ; 2 flu'vi-co-īl'nē, n. pl. Ornith. The Tenuipetræ. Flu-vi'o-la, n. (t. g.) [< L. fluvius (fluo), river.] + -ola, dim. suffix.]—flu'vine, a.

flu'vi-o-, 1 flū'vɪ-o-; 2 flu'vi-o-. From Latin fluvius, river (see FLUVIAL); a combining form.— flu'vi-o-gla'cial, a. Geol. The same as glacio-fluvial.— f.-glacial theory (Geol.), the theory of land-formation by the combined action of glacial ice, water, and winds, explaining certain deposits, as of the loess of China.— flu'vi-o-graph, n. Same as FLUVIOMETER.— flu'vio-la-cus'trine, Geol. Of or pertaining to deposits formed jointly by streams and lakes, as lake-deltas which mingle with beaches.— flu'vi-ol'o-gy, n. The science of the streams of water, as rivers in relation to their forms, changes, and effects.— flu'vi-o-ma-rine', a. Geol. Formed by or pertaining to the joint action of the waters of rivers or ocean and those of inflowing streams, as delta deposits.— fluviomarine series, the general name given by Edward Forbes to the strata of Oligocene age in the Isle of Wight.— flu'vi-o-me'ter, n. A mechanical contrivance for measuring the rise and fall of a river. —flu'vi-ose, a. Flowing, as a river. flu'vi-ous†.—flu'vio-ter-res'tri-al, a. Of or pertaining to the land and fresh waters of the earth; as, fluvio-terrestrial deposits.

flux, 1 flŭks; 2 flŭks, v. I. t. 1. To melt, or make fluid. 2. Med. To cause to evacuate; purge; cleanse. 3. To treat with a flux, such as borax, in order to permit or facilitate fusion or to prevent the forming of oxids. 4†. To cause to flow; overflow.

II. i. 1. To rise: said of the tide. 2. [Rare.] To flow; move; change. 3. [Rare or Obs.] To liquefy; melt. 4†. To suffer a flux of blood; have a hemorrhage.— flux'ing-bed", n. The lower and slightly concave hearth of the furnace, used in making sodaash.

flux, n. [Rare or Archaic.] Subject to change; flowing.

Considering the frequent vicissitudes that occur, and the flux nature of all things here.
BARROW Sermons vol. i, ser. xi, p. 440, [c. c. n. 1845.]

flux, n. 1. A continuous flowing, actual or figurative; a state of constant movement, change, or renewal; as, the flux of the tide; the flux and reflux of forces.

We live in a transient period, when forms and fashions and ideas are in a state of flux. BARING-GOULD Germany, Present and Past ch. 9, p. 288, [n. m. & co.]

2. Med. An abnormal flow of some fluid of the body; a morbid discharge of fluid matter; also, rarely, matter that is discharged, whether morbid or natural; excretion.

Illness depressed the troops, some suffering from fluxes, some from swellings in the throat.
KINGSFORD Canada bk. viii, ch. 1, p. 91. [n. & n. 1889.]

3. Chem. & Metal. A substance, as borax or an alkali, that promotes the fusing of minerals or metals; as, in soldering tinware, rosin is commonly used as a flux.

When the presence or absence of these alkali-metals is to be determined, . . . pulverized silicate must not be fused with carbonate of sodium, but with some decomposing flux. Free from alkali. ELIOT AND STORER Qualitative Chem. Anal. p. 118. [c. n. & co. 1879.]

4. The process of melting; fusion. 5. Math. A vector referred to a unit of surface. 6. Physics. The rate of flow or transfer of water, heat, electricity, energy, etc.; the quantity that crosses a unit area of a given surface in a unit of time. 7. In the philosophy of Heraclitus, the eternal motion and mutability of all things. 8. Any readily fusible glass or enamel used as a base or ground in ceramic-work. 9. [Archaic.] The flowing of people together; concourse.

Thou art he Whom all the flux of nations come to see.
HERBERT Good Friday l. 22.

[F., < L. fluxus, < fluxus, pp. of fluo, flow.] SYN.: see CURRENT.— Baumé's quick flux, powder of fusion.— bilious f., a discharge of bile.— black f., a mixture of potassium carbonate and charcoal, produced by igniting one part niter and two parts cream tartar.— bloody f., see BLOODY.— f. function (Math.), the function that forms the left-hand term of the equation of stream-lines in a fluid, the right hand term being a constant.— flux'me'ter, n. Elec. A device used to measure the flux in a magnetic circuit or field.— f.-sweep, n. 1. The decurrent butterfly-weed (Asclepias decumbens). 2. The common butterfly-weed or pleurisy-root (A. tuberosa). —f.-spoon, n. A small ladle used to dip out molten metal for examination.— f. turn, same as LINKAGE. 4.— f. turns (Elec.), the product of the flux in a magnetic circuit with the number of turns in the coil which carries the magnetizing current.— flux'weed, n. Any of various plants supposed to be a specific for flux. See FLIXWEED.— gold f., same as AVENTURIN, 1.— light-f., n. Photom. The entire beam of light, including the rays of all kinds of luminous energy to the time of duration.— magnetic f., the number of magnetic lines of force passing through a magnetic circuit. See MAGNETIC CIRCUIT.— Mohr f., a clear leaf glass used for fusitat on diamonds and other gems and stones variously colored.— menstrual f., the menses.— salivary f., salivation.— white f., a mixture of equal parts of niter and cream of tartar burned until white, consisting essentially of potassium carbonate.

flux'i-bil'i-ty, 1 flŭks'ɪ-bĭl'ɪ-tɪ; 2 flŭks'i-bĭl'i-ty, n. The quality of being fluxible; fusibility.

flux'i-ble'*, 1 flŭks'ɪ-bl; 2 flŭks'i-bl, a. 1. Capable of being fluxed or fused; fusible. 2†. Subject to flux or change; flowing.—flux'i-bl.e-ness†, n. Fluxibility.— flux'i-bly, adv.

flux'ile, flux-il'i-ty†. Fluxible; fluxibility.

flux'ion, 1 flŭk'shən; 2 flŭk'shon, n. 1. The act of flowing or melting; that which flows or melts.

The philosophy we want is one of fluxions and mobility. EMERSON Representative Men, Montaigne p. 131. [c. m. & co. 1890.]

2. Math. (1) The rate of flow or change in a variable or changing mathematical quantity; a differential coefficient, especially where time is the independent variable: introduced by Newton. The fluxion was denoted by a dot placed over the fluent. (2) pl. The method of fluxions. See phrase below. 3. Med. A morbid determination of blood to any one organ; as, a fluxion to the brain. 4. A constantly varying record, or indication, as in a sundial. [F., < L. fluxio(n-), < fluxus, pp.; see FLUX, n.]— flux'ion-struc'ture, n. 1. Same as FLOW STRUCTURE, under FLOW. 2. Same as FLOWAGE. fluxional structure†. 3. A structure that includes such phenomena as flow-lines, parallel cleavage, metallic crystallization, elongation of vesicles, etc.— inverse method of fluxions (Math.), that part of Newton's method of fluxions corresponding to the modern integral calculus.— method or calculus of fluxions, that form of infinitesimal calculus invented by Newton, in which fluxions were used instead of differentials.— flux'ion-al, a. Of or pertaining to or due to fluxions. 2. [Rare.] Of a nature to flow; fluxible.— flux'ion-al-ly, adv.— flux'ion-a-ry, a. 1. Math. Fluxional. The labours of Peter Fermat . . . approached almost nearer to the fluxionary calculus. BREWSTER Life of Newton ch. 19, p. 1. [c. 1830.]

2. Med. Relating to or produced by fluxion.— flux'ion-list, n. Math. A skilled student of fluxions. [constant.

flux'ive, a. 1. Flowing; lacking solidity. 2. Variable; fluxional.

fluxt'ure, n. 1. The flow of a fluid; flux. 2. Fluidity; fluid matter.

fly¹, 1 flī; 2 fly, n. [PLEW; FLOWN; FLY'ING.] I. i. 1. To cause to float or rise in or move through the air; cause to take flight; as, to fly an airplane; to fly pigeons. 2. To get swiftly away or escape from; flee from; avoid; shun; as, to fly the face of a foe. 3. To float in air; float (sheets as printed) and lay (them) in proper position. See FLY², n., 1 (2). 4†. To attack or hunt by flight, as of a hawk.

II. i. 1. (1) To pass through or move or rise in the air by or as by using oars or a propelling contrivance; as, the swallow flies homeward. (2) To travel through the air in a flying-machine or aeroplane. 2. To move or go quickly or violently, as from some sudden impulse or before the wind; hasten; rush; dart; run; dart; as, the arrow flies; the door flew open; the sparks fly from the stone; I fly to your aid. 3. (1) To go away by or as by flight; attempt to escape; pass away or disappear quickly; flee; depart; as, I must fly from you; justice is wealth had flown. (2) To shift or change quickly, as the wind. 4. To stream or float in air or water; wave; flutter; as, the banner flies from its standard.

Flag of the heaven! that flies on high,
The sign of hope and triumph high.
DRAKE The American Flag st. 3.

5. To be violently rent or broken; burst or separate suddenly; shiver; as, the cracked bell flew to pieces. 6. To pass suddenly or violently, as if without self-control; as, he flew into a rage. 7. To fade or disappear: said of a color.

And in our own blood drenched the pen,
As if such colors could not fly.
E. B. BROWNING My Heart and I st. 2.

8. Falconry. To hunt with, as with a hawk. 9. To have an undeviating direction, as stairs. 10. Baseball. To bat a fly: usually with out. [< AS. flēogan.] SYN.: flee, fleet, flit, haste, hasten, run, soar, speed. See ESCAPE.

— fly'-by-night", n. 1. One given to nocturnal rambles or to being out at night. 2. One who cheats a creditor by decamping at night. 3. Same as FLY², n., 4. Naut A square sail like a studding-sail, used by sloops in sailing before the wind; also, a jib used as a studdingsail and reaching from the topmast-head.— fly-title, n. Print. A half-title.— fly-up-the-creek, n. [Colloq., U. S.] 1. The green heron (Ardea virescens). 2. A frivolous capricious person. 3. [Colloq., U. S.] One born in Florida.— to fly about (Naut.), to keep veering and shifting: said of the wind.—

to fly around or round, to move about briskly.— to fly at, to attack or assault suddenly; rush toward in a hostile manner; attempt to bite, scratch, or injure.— to fly in (Railroad.), to shunt, as cars, by a flying switch.— to fly kites [Coin. Slang], to issue checks, drafts, or promissory notation notes or by exchanging checks when one or both makers have no money to meet them.— to fly off. 1. To become suddenly dissevered; dart away; hence, to disappear; evaporate. 2. To rebel against; revolt.— to fly off the handle (Colloq.), to lose control of oneself through passion.— to fly on or upon, to pounce upon; seize; assail; attack.— to fly open, to open freely, suddenly, or in a violent manner.— to fly out. 1. To rush, run, or shoot out quickly. 2. To break away from moral restraint; burst forth. 3. To give way in passion. Baseball. To knock a fly that is caught.— to fly the black flag, to practise piracy; hence, to show no quarter.— to fly the coop [Slang, U. S.], to decamp; quit.— to fly to, up in, or up into the wind (Naut.), to turn suddenly so as to take the wind, as when going about, or to come up quickly to the wind after running free or wearing.— to let fly. 1. To utter, throw, or discharge violently; as, to let fly an oath. 2. Naut. To let go suddenly, as the sheets of a sail.— to make the fur or feathers fly [Colloq.], to attack a person or thing vigorously and with effect.— fly'a-bl(ĕ), a.

fly³, vt. & vi. To convey or ride in a fly.

fly, a. [Slang.] Not easily imposed upon; fully aware of what is wanted or intended; knowing; sharp; wide-awake; as, a very fly salesman.

fly¹, n. [FLIES, 1 flăiz; 2 flīg, pl.] 1. A dipterous or two-

1. A Muscid Fly (Musca domestica). 1a. Foot of the same, magnified. 2. A Syrphid Fly (Syrphus pyrastri).

winged insect, as a sand-fly or black-fly; especially, a brachycerous insect with short, usually 3-jointed antennæ, as a crane-fly or gadfly; more especially, a muscid, as the common house-fly. See the compound words noted.

Flies, and other insects which in not strictly flies resemble them, receive their popular names chiefly from: (1) the time when they appear or are abundant, as harvest-fly, May-fly; (2) the habits of their life, as fish-fly; (3) the places they frequent, as house-fly, lake-fly, sand-fly; (4) their color, as black-fly, green-fly; (5) their annoying or destructive habits, as deer-fly; (6) the animals they attack, as deer-fly, horse-fly; (7) the places where they lay their eggs as carrion-fly; (8) some special characteristic, as lace-winged fly.

2. Some other flying insect; as, a Spanish fly or cantharid beetle; a lace-winged fly; a May-fly. 3. A fish-hook more or less concealed by feathers, silk, etc., arranged to imitate some insect, and used by anglers as a lure in the mode of fishing called fly-fishing.

Fish are we that love the mud, Rising to no fancy-flies.
TENNYSON Vision of Sin. div. iv, st. 10.

4. [FLYS, 1 flaiz; 2 flīg, pl.] A light carriage or hackney-coach; a quick-running vehicle for passengers.

In the morning we took a fly, (an English term for an exceedingly sluggish vehicle,) and drove up to the Minster. HAWTHORNE Our Old Home, Pilgrimage to Boston p. 171. [c. A. 1863.]

5. Something insignificant or worthless. 6. A fly-shaped ornament, as a patch for the face or a pin for the hair. 7. [F-] Astron. Same as MUSCA. 8†. A familiar spirit. [< AS. flēoġe, < flēoġan, fly.]

—ant-decapitating fly, a fly (Apocephalus pergandei) which lays its egg on the abdomen of the black carpenter-ant. The burrowing of the larva into the head finally causes the decapitation of the ant.— artificial fly, same as FLY, n., 3.— Berna fly, a breeding acaroform fly that lays its eggs in wounds and in the nostrils of man and other animals.— big-eyed fly, a fly with unusually prominent eyes, especially any one of the Pipunculidæ.— circling-seam fly, any fly belonging to the Cyclorrhapha: so called from the manner in which the chrysalis opens.— Columbatz fly (Zool.), a fly (Simulium columbaczense) pestilent in the Danube countries and akin to the buffalo-gnats.— fish-fly¹, n. An insect of the family Sialidæ.— fly'-a-gar'lic, or fly'-am"a-ni"ta, n. A common but deadly species of mushroom (Amanita muscaria) studded with white or yellow warts, and found in birch-woods: used in a decoction for destroying flies.— fly-anchor, n [Local, Scot.] A sea-anchor; drogue.— fly-bait, n. A fly or flies fastened to a hook for fishing.— fly-ball, n. Mech. Having balls or weights that are thrown out centrifugally, as in the governor of an engine.— fly'bane", n. Bot. 1. The fly-agaric. 2. The rhamnaceous shrub, any of several species of plants belonging to the genus Stilene.— fly-bitten, a. Marked with or as with bites of flies.— fly-blister, n. A blister of cantharides.— fly-book, n. A pocket-book in which to carry anglers' flies.— fly-bug, n. A large European bug (Reduvius personatus), said to devour the bedbug.— fly-case, n. The casing of an insect, especially the elytra or wing-cases of a beetle.— fly-caster, n. A fly-fisher.— fly-casting, n.— fly-catching, a. 1. Habitually pursuing insects upon the wing, as a bird; catching flies. 2. Musicianship.— fly-cheat, n. Any of a fly-book.— fly-dressing, n. The act, art, or process of making and mounting artificial flies for angling.— fly-eater, n. [Austral.] A small insectivorous honey-sucker.— fly-fish", n. A brilliantly colored rockfish (Sebastichthys rhodochloris) of the California coast.— fly-fisher, n. One who practises fly-fishing.— fly-fisherman, n. = fly-fisher, n. The art, act, or sport of fishing, as for trout, with natural or artificial flies.— fly-flap. I. n. & vi. To use a fly-flap upon; to drive away, as flies with a fly-flap. II. n. A flapper for driving away or killing flies. 2. A variety of somersault. 3†. A stroke with the instrument; hence, a successful move.— fly-flapper, n. 1. A fly-flap.

2. One who uses a fly-flap. 3. One who turns a fly-flap (somersault).— fly-flick, n. A broad-wire broom to kill flies with.— fly-fringe, n. A kind of fringe, with tassels supposed to resemble flies, used on women's dresses (18th century).— fly-fungus, n. See AMANITA.— fly-honeysuckle, n. An upright bushy American shrub (Lonicera ciliata) bearing straw-yellow flowers and red berries; also, a similar British shrub (L. xylosteum).— fly-hook, n. A fish-hook adapted for or furnished with an artificial fly.— fly-line, n. 1. A line suitable for fishing with an artificial fly; a line armed with a fly-hook. 2. The customary course of a bird in migration.— fly-maker, n. One who makes artificial flies; a fly-tier.— fly'man, n. The driver of a fly or light passenger-coach.— fly-mould, n. The fungus Empusa muscæ. See EMPUSA.— fly-mushroom, n. The fly-agaric.— fly-net, n. 1. A net worn by horses to keep off flies. 2. Any netting, as in a window, for excluding insects.— fly-orchis, n. An English orchid (Ophrys muscifera) having flowers suggestive of a fly.— fly-paper, n. An adhesive paper or one impregnated with poison for catching or killing flies.— fly-poison, n. Poison suitable for killing flies. 2. A wild plant (Amianthium muscætoxicum) of the eastern United States. A preparation from the bulb has been used to poison flies.— fly-powder, n. A powder, usually arsenical, for destroying flies.— fly-rod, n. A light, jointed, flexible rod, suitable for fly-fishing. See FISHING-ROD.— fly-rubbish, n. One portion of fly-snap"per, n. 1. A fly-catching pitlogonatoid bird (Phitotrepcla nitens) of Mexico and adjacent parts of the United States, related to the waxwings. The male is glossy-black with white on the inner webs of the quills, the female brownish-gray. 2. A myiagrine fly-catcher.— fly-speck, vt. To mark or soil with fly-specks.— fly-specked, a. 1. The dot made by the excrement of an insect, especially that of the house-fly; hence, any insignificant speck. 2. Vet. Pathol. A disease of the apple, pear, and other plants, forming small black specks on the fruit; caused by the numerous rhapidaceous fungus Lipothyrium pomi.— fly-stone, n. A mineral containing arsenic and cobalt, used, when powdered and mixed with sweetened water, for poisoning flies.— fly-tackle, n. The apparatus of rod, reel, line, hooks, etc., used in fly-fishing; especially, the arrangement of leader, snells, and hooks.— fly-taker, n. A fish that will bite at a fly.— fly-tick, n. A parasitic mite (Tyroglyphus parasiticum) that lives on the house-fly; a small red tick.— fly-tier, n. A maker of artificial flies.— fly-tip, n. The tip or tinpiece of a fly-rod.— fly-trap, n. A trap for catching flies. 2. Bot. The spreading dogbane (Apocynum androsæmifolium); also, the Venus's fly-trap. 3. [Slang] The mouth.— Venus's fly-trap, see VENUS, 6.— fly-water, n. A solution, usually poisonous, for killing flies.— fly-weevil, n. [Local, U. S.] The grain-moth (Galechia cerealella).— golden-eyed lace-winged fly, a chrysopa.— grass-stem fly, any fly belonging to the Oscinidæ, the larvæ of which infest the stems of grains and grasses.— green bottle-fly, n. Same as GREENBOTTLE.— greenhouse white fly, an insect (Aleyrodes vaporariorum) infesting greenhouse plants.— hessian fly, same as GRANNOM. greentail!:— hippelates fly, a minute fly, belonging to the genus Hippelates, that hovers round the eyes of men and animals and is believed to carry the causative organisms of "pinkeye."— humpbacked fly, a fly belonging to the family Phoridæ.— larder-fly, n. Same as BACON-BEETLE.— long-legged fly, a fly belonging to the Dolichopodidæ.— melon fly, a fruit-fly (Dacus cucurbitæ) common in the Hawaiian Islands, which produces a maggot destructive to melons and cucumbers.— midge-like fly, a nemocerous gnat-like fly.— moth-like fly, a fly belonging to the Psychodidæ.— motucа-fly, n. Same as MOTUCA.— night-fly, n. 1. A fly that goes about at night. 2. A fly used by night in fishing.— orange-fly, n. Any one of various trypetine dipterous insects whose maggots burrow into oranges, as Trypeta ludens.— peach-fly, n. A trypetine fly (Carattis ovitata) of warm countries whose maggots eat into peaches as well as other fruit.— salt-water fly, a brine-fly.— screw-worm fly, see SCREW-WORM.— sereot-fly, n. A tabanid fly of Africa capable of inflicting a venomous bite.— small-headed fly, a fly belonging to the Acroceridæ.— spear-winged fly, a fly belonging to the Lonchopteridæ.— stem-eyed fly, an American fly (Syrphopsis fenestrata) found on skunk-cabbage; the eyes are placed on small projections at the side of the head.— tangle-veined fly, a fly belonging to the Nemestrinidæ.— tent-fly, n. 1. A fly for one person or thing] [Slang, U. S.], he (or it) has no blemishes, or is not behind the times.— thick-head fly, a fly belonging to the Conopidæ.— tobacco white fly, a homopteron (Aleyrodes tabaci) infesting tobacco.— typhoid fly, the common fly (Musca domestica): so called as the carrier of the disease.— white fly. 1. A fly (Bibio albipennis) common in the spring. 2. A fly (Chionea valga) of the family Ephemeridæ. 3. (1) The adult insects belonging to the Aleyrodidæ. (2) The fly (Aleyrodes citri) infesting the orange-, yellow-fever epidemic. 4. The mycetophilid genus Sciara whose appearance in large numbers in the United States coincided with a yellow-fever epidemic.

fly², n. 1. The part of various machines that move or swing rapidly through the air, or have some relation to such motion. (1) A speed-regulating device, usually consisting of vanes upon a rotating shaft: used in music-boxes, and in the delicate adjustment of clocks. (2) An elongated frame oscillating quickly upon a horizontal axis, taking the sheets from the tapes or cylinder of a printing-press and delivering them upon the table. (3) The whole apparatus that takes sheets from a press. (3) A knitting-machine latch. (4) A fly-shuttle. (5) The length of a flag, measured from the staff or attachment to the outer edge. (6) That part of a flag farthest from the staff, or beyond the canton. (7) The swinging portion of a vane for showing the direction of the wind. (8) A fly-wheel. (9) Any fly-arm, or other mechanical device involving the fly-wheel principle. (9) † A compass-card.

2. A strip of cloth on a garment, to contain or to cover the buttonholes; hence, something used to cover or connect; a flap, as of a bootee. 3. An upper covering to a ridge-pole tent (see FLY-TENT); also, the flap at the entrance of a tent, forming a door when closed.

Sometimes the kitchen and dining-room were put opposite each other, with a fly covering the space between.
ELIZABETH B. CUSTER Boots and Saddles p. 236. [c.]

4. The condition or movement of a ball when sent flying through the air, before it strikes the earth or any fixed object, as in baseball, also, the ball thus flying; as, to catch a fly; to be out on a fly. 5. Waste cotton. 6. The hinged board over the keyboard of a piano or organ. 7. Naut. That part of a mechanical log which trails in the water. See LOG. 8. The act or state of flying; flight. 9. A public carriage; also, a delivery-wagon. 10. Theat. The space above the stage and behind the proscenium containing the borders, the mechanism for handling and setting the scenery, the overhead lights, etc. [< FLY¹, v. In sense 8 < AS. flyge, < flēogan, fly.] flyer.

—fly ball (Baseball), same as FLY¹, n., 4.— fly'-block", n. The upper block of the topsail-halyards, or any block which changes its position with the operation of working parts.— fly-board, n. Print. A board to receive sheets from the fly; delivery-board.— fly-boy, n. Print. A boy who removes printed sheets as they come from the press, or straightens them as they leave the fly.— fly-cap, n. A cap with wing-like projections, once worn by women.— fly-cutter, n. Mech. A high-speed machine cutter.— fly-finish, n. To fit together the movable parts of (a piano).— fly-finisher, n.— fly-finishing, n.— fly-frame, n. A machine for spinning and smoothing slate glass.— fly-gallery, n. One of the galleries in the flies of a theater, from which parts of the scenery are moved.— fly-governor, n. Mech. An old form of governor having vanes instead of weights.

— fly-leaf, n. [FLYLEAVES, pl.] A blank leaf at the beginning or end of a book, pamphlet, or the like.

HAWTHORNE Mosses, The Old Manse p. 28. [N. M. A. c. 1891.]

— fly'man, n. A man who works the ropes of the drop-scenes and borders, etc., in a theater.— fly-nut, n. A nut with wings or projections, or shaped so as to be turned on its screw with the fingers; a thumb-nut.— fly-spanning, n. The successive pressing of an obtuse cutting-tool over another of a tract of land, to manure it.— fly-spress, n. A hand screw-press having a fly-wheel or a heavily weighted lever to enable it to acquire momentum before striking the blow: used in striking medals, etc.— fly-spulley, n. A loose pulley.— fly-sail, n. A bar or bracket drawn or turned out to support the hinged leaf of a table.— fly-reed, n. Textile. A fly-shuttle loom-reed, the blow of which is limited in force by springs.— fly-rollway, n. Logging. A way down which logs may roll.— fly-rope, n. The rope used in the telodynamic transmission of power.— fly-sheet, n. A small sheet of paper such as is used for printing handbills, etc.; also, an advertising slip; a handbill.— fly-shuttle, n. A loom-shuttle driven by a picker-stick and cord.— fly-table, n. The receiving table of a printing-press, on which the printed sheets are piled by the fly.— fly'tail", n. [Local, U. S.] An unweighted gill-net for small fish.— fly-tent, n. A tent having two canvas roofs, one above the other, touching each other only at the ridge-pole.— fly-title, n. Brit. Print. Same as BASTARD TITLE.— fly'-wagon, n. Same as FLY, n., 9.— fly-weight, n. Having small size or balls that spring out by centrifugal action while revolving.— on the fly, while flying; in the act or process of flight.

fly'a-way", 1 flaĭ'ə-wē'; 2 flī'ə-wā', a. [Colloq.] Disposed to flightiness or to run or blow away; flying around; fluttering; restless; harum-scarum; giddy; as, a fly-away girl.

Telling the wild, fly-away looking Arabs to fasten on astern, we towed our pilots in. J. L. MOTLEY Rise of the Dutch Republic vol. 1, p. 4. [N. 1859.]

fly'a-way", n. One who or that which is flighty, swift, or elusive; as, the colt is a regular flyaway.

But, Truth is such a flyaway, such a slyboots, so untransportable and unhandselable, that it is hard to get it to be caught in light. EMERSON Nature, Literary Ethics p. 166. [N. M. A. c. co.1889.]

— fly'-a-way"-grass", n. A delicate bent-grass (Agrostis scabra) of the United States, having a loose purplish panicle, readily scattered by the wind; hair-grass; rough hair-grass.

fly'-ball", etc. See under FLY², n.

fly'blow", 1 flaĭ'blō'; 2 flī'blō', v. [FLY'BLOWN'; FLY'-BLOW'ING.] I. t. To deposit flyblows upon; taint with or as with flyblows; hence, to contaminate; damage; corrupt; spoil; foul; render offensive or unfit for use. II. i. To lay eggs in meat or the like, as a fly.

fly'blow", a. Of, pertaining to, or like a flyblow; damaging; impure.

I am a woman of repute;
No flyblow gossip ever spoiled my fame.
E. B. BROWNING Aurora Leigh bk. iv, l. 265.

fly'blow", n. The egg or young larva of a fly, especially a flesh-fly or house-fly.

fly'blown", 1 flaĭ'blōn'; 2 flī'blōn', a. Tainted with flyblows; damaged; contaminated; spoiled.

fly'boat", 1 flaĭ'bōt'; 2 flī'bōt', n. 1. A large flat-bottomed Dutch coasting-boat. 2. A narrow flat-bottomed English canal-boat; swift-boat. 3. A swift sailboat. [Cp. D. vlieboot.]

fly'-by-night", 1 flaĭ'bī-naĭt'; 2 flī'-bī-naĭt', n. 1. [Slang.] One who defrauds his creditors by decamping in the night. 2. One given to making nocturnal excursions. 3. Naut. A square sail, resembling a studdingsail, sometimes used on the yards when running before the wind.

fly'-catch"er, 1 flaĭ'-kach"ər; 2 flī'-kach"ər, n. One who or that which catches flies.

fly-catch"er, n. 1. Any bird that habitually captures insects upon the wing. (1) A small thrush-like muscicapoid oscine bird of the Old World, having a weak, flattened bill with prominent rictal bristles; the spotted flycatcher (Muscicapa grisola). (2) An American tyrannoid diamastrine bird, a true flycatcher, as the least flycatcher (Empidonax minimus), king-bird, peewee, great-crested flycatcher. (3) An American fly-catching warbler, as the Canada warbler, the American redstart.— paradise fly-catcher, a paradise-flycatcher.— restless f., a small Australian flycatcher (Sisura inquieta).

fly'-dung", 1 flaĭ'-dŭng'; 2 flī'-dŭng', n. Excrement of flies. To subject rapidly and for the first time to the process of dunging.

fly'er, n. Same as FLIER.

fly'-fish"er, fly-fishing, etc. See under FLY¹, n.

fly'ing, 1 flaĭ'iŋ; 2 flī'ing, pa. 1. Intended or adapted for swift or easy motion, or motion through the air; moving with or as with wings; hence, moving rapidly or continuously; making only short stops; fleeting; as, flying artillery; a flying bird; a flying trip or visit. 2. Floating or suspended so as to float in the air; spanning a space through the air; as, a flying banner; a flying buttress. 3. Extending or being beyond the ordinary; extra; as, a flying jib.

—flying army, a body of troops equipped for rapid movements, and continually maneuvered to harass the enemy and protect its own garrisons.— f. at hack, in falconry, flying at large; hence, figuratively, as a trained hawk.— f. bister, a blister used merely to redden the skin, and moved from place to place.— f. cat. 1. A flying lemur. 2. A flying squirrel; taguan.— f. colors, flags and banners carried aloft or waved in the air, as in triumph.— f. doe [Austral.], a young female kangaroo.— f. Dutchman, see DUTCHMAN.— f. fall (Wrestling), the act of a wrestler, thrown so that both his shoulders strike the ground, who recovers a standing position before his opponent can take advantage of his momentary fall. WM. MULDOON.— fly'ing-dish", n. 1.

Flying Fox. 1/5

An exoccetine fish with very large pectoral fins buoying it up while it moves through the air. The distance traversed varies from a few rods to over 200 yards. Flying-fishes are found in the open sea in greatschools. The flying-fishes . . . emerge from the water, and spreading their broad wing-like fins sail through the air and dispense in all directions. AUDUBON in Ann. Audubon's John James Audubon p. 120. [C. P. P., 1879.]

2. A flying gurnard.—f. fox, a large fruglvorous pteropodoid bat, especially of the genus Pteropus, of the warmer parts of the Old World, with foxlike snout; fox bat.—f. frog, a ranoid tree-frog (Rhacophorus marmoratus) of Borneo, having elongated webbed toes serving as parachutes.—f. gecko, an East-Indian gecko-lizard (Ptychozoon homalocephalum) having wing-like expansion of the skin along the sides and legs and between the toes, acting as a parachute.—f. gurnard, a dactylopteroid marine fish having very long functional pectoral fins divided into a smaller upper and a longer lower or posterior portion. They are able to flutter for short distances in the air. Dactylopterus volitans is common in the Atlantic.—f. handicap, see HANDICAP.—f. liny [Southern U. S.], a merry-go-round.—f. kite, any upper sail carried by a sailing ship during light winds.—f. lemur, a galeopithecoid insectivore having the fore and hind limbs connected by a fold of skin, by the aid of which it makes flying leaps.—f. lizard, a dragon-lizard.—f. mare (Wrestling), a throw secured by subduing one's opponent by the wrist, turning about, and jerking him over one's shoulder.—f. marmot, the tagnan.—f. mouse, the pigmy flying phalanger (Acrobates pygmæus).—f. parts, the small body of soldiers, equipped for rapid movements, whose duty it is to harass an enemy.—f. phalanger, an arboreal phalangerine marsupial of either of the genera Petaurus, Acrobates, etc., having a flying membrane along the sides; a petaurist.—f. pinion, a vane or fly as used in spring clocks; flyspinion.—f. robin, a flying gurnard.—f. spider, a ballooning spider.—f. squid, a squid (genus Ommastrephes) having broad lateral fins by means of which it can spring high out of the water.—f. squirrel. 1. A squirrel of either of the genera Sciuropterus and Pteromys, having on each side a fold of skin forming a parachute, by the help of which the animal can make long sailing leaps from tree to tree. The species of Sciuropterus, as the common flying squirrel (S. volans) of North America, have a broad, flat, laterally expanded tail. 2. [Austral.] A flying phalanger.—f. torch, a torch attached to a pole and used as a military night-signal.—f.-watchman, n. [Local, Eng.] The dor-beetle.—to come off with f. colors. 1. To march out, as the garrison of a besieged town, with flags flying: a token of honorable defeat. 2. To be triumphantly successful; gain the victory, as in an argument or contest; as, he came off, as the disputation, with flying colors.

fly'ing, n. 1. The act of flight; flight, as of a bird. 2. pl. Loose material, as fibers, flocting in the air.—fly'-ing-boat', n. A hydroaeroplane.—f.-machine, n. Aëro. A heavier-than-air aerial vehicle which is sustained in the air by aerodynamic forces. ORVILLE WRIGHT.

fly'-leaf', fly'man', fly-nut, etc. See under FLY, n.

Flynt, 1 flint; 2 flynt, Josiah. Pen-name of Josiah Flynt Willard.

fly'-off', 1 flī'-ôf'; 2 flī'-ôf', n. The amount of rainfall drawn up into the air by the sun; in contradistinction to run-off which is that portion of the rainfall discharged from the land by streams.

Flysch, 1 flīsh, n. [Swiss.] Geol. A thick group of strata, chiefly sandstone, extending from southwestern Switzerland through the northern Alps to the Vienna basin, where it is often called the Vienna sandstone. The Flysch is in part Upper Cretaceous, in part Eocene.

fly'-tail', 1 flī'-tāl'; 2 flī'-tāl', n. [Southern U. S.] A small gill-net formerly in use for perch, etc.

fly'-weight, n. [Sport.] A boxer weighing 112 lbs.: the lightest weight class.

fly'-wheel', 1 flī'-hwēl'; 2 flī'-hwēl', n. A heavy wheel which, by its revolution, assists in securing uniform motion to machinery, resisting sudden accelerations of speed by its inertia, and sudden retardations by its momentum; as, the fly-wheel of a steam-engine.—segmental fly-wheel, a heavy fly-wheel made up of iron sectors. See illus. under SPOKE.

fly'wort', 1 flī'wûrt'; 2 flī'-wûrt', n. Any species of Catasetum, a genus of tropical American orchids, remarkable for their manner of ejecting pollen.

F. M., f. m., etc. See ABBREVIATION.

fmese', vt. To breathe heavily; snore.

Fo. or fo., abbr. Folio.

foal, 1 fōl; 2 fōl, n. & t. To give birth to: said of a mare or other equine animal. II. i. To bring forth a foal.

foal, n. 1. The young of an equine animal, as a horse, and also of some other mammals, as a camel.

2. A boy helper in English collieries. [< AS. fola; cp. L. pullus, any young animal.] foaler.—foal'foot', n. Coltsfoot.—f.-teeth, n. pl. The first teeth of a horse: analogous to the human milk-teeth.—to be in f. or with foal, to be pregnant, as a mare or a camel.

foald, pp. Foaled. S. S.

foam, 1 fōm; 2 fōm, v. I. i. 1. To cause to foam. 2. [Rare.] To express with rage or violence; as, to foam out threats. II. t. To gather, produce, or emit foam, or become full of foam; froth.

A hundred neighing steeds . . .
That bound and foam and champ the golden bit.
CONGREVE Mourning Bride act i, sc. 1.

[< AS. famen, < fām, foam.]—foaming boiler, a sectional boiler having tubes so arranged as to generate steam with violent ebullition.—foam'ing-ly, adv. Frothily.

foam, n. 1. A collection of minute bubbles resulting from strong agitation of a liquid, or from fermentation, and forming a frothy, somewhat adhesive, and usually whitish mass; also, a similar formation from the saliva in an animal's mouth, as when over-driven, irritated, or diseased; froth; spume; scum.

With foam, white as the bitten lip of Hate.
BROWNING Paracelsus pt. v, l. 688.

2. Figuratively, rage or fury. 3†. The raging sea; a seething billow. 4†. Seum, as of a molten metal. [< AS. fām.] fom†; fome†; foom†.—foam'-bow, n. The arch, similar to a rainbow, formed by sunlight on foam or spray.—f.-collector, n. A scum-catcher in a steam-boiler.—f.-spar, n. Same as APHRITE.—f.-wreath, n. Crested foam, as of a breaker.—foam'less, a. Having no foam.—foam'y, a. Covered with or like foam; frothy.

For busy thoughts, the stream flowed on in foamy agitation.
WORDSWORTH Yarrow Revisited st. 3.

foamd, pp. Foamed. S. S.

foard, 1 fōrd; 2 fōrd, n. A county in N. Texas; 636 sq. m.; county-seat, Crowell.

fob[1], 1 fŏb; 2 fŏb, n. [FOUBED, FOBB[3]; FOB'BING.] To put into one's fob; pocket; obtain.

fob[2], n. 1. The advantage of a cheat; trick. 2†. To beat or ill-treat. [< D. foppen.]—to fob off, to dispose of slightingly or by artifice; get rid of cunningly; palm off.

fob[4], n. 1. A watch-pocket in the waistband of trousers.

I had a fair tay at a charming gold watch. Pox take the tailors for making the fobs so deep and narrow!
GAY Beggar's Opera act i, sc. 1.

2. A fob-chain. [Cp. G. dial. fuppe, pocket.]—fob'-ac'tion, n. A sham action at law: frequently arranged so as to result in an injunction.—f.-chain, n. A watch-chain, commonly a broad ribbon of woven silk ornamented with gold, hanging free from a fob.—fob-watch, n.

fobb[1], n. [Local, Eng.] A fop; froth.

fobb[2], n. 1. A cheat; trick; also, a swindler. 2. A tap on the shoulder; a malicious arrest.

f. o. b., abbr. Free on board.

fo'cal, 1 fō'kal; 2 fō'cal, a. Of, pertaining to, situated at, or constituting a focus; as, the great focal points of history. [< L. focus, hearth.]—focal disease or lesion, a disease conducted to a limited portion of tissue.—f. distance or length, the distance from the optical center of a lens or mirror to the point where the rays converge; in a telescope, the distance to the distance of the mirrored image from the object-glass.—f. plane, a plane through the focus of a lens, perpendicular to its axis, on which the images of distant points near the axis are formed.—fo'cal-ize, vt. To bring or adjust to a focus.—fo'cal-i-za'tion, n.—fo'cal-old, n. The shell between the surface of two confocal ellipsoids.

Foch, 1 fōsh; 2 fōch or fŏsh. Ferdinand (b/1851–/a 1929). French field-marshal; generalissimo (1918) of armies of the Allies in Europe during the World War (1914–1918).

fo'ci, 1 fō'sī; 2 fō'sī, n. Plural of FOCUS.

fo-cim'e-ter, 1 fo-sim'i-ter; 2 fo-cim'e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring the focal lengths of lenses or combinations of lenses. [< FOCUS + -METER.] fo-com'e-ter.—fo-cim'e-try, n. fo-com'e-try.—fo'cō-met'ric, a. Relating to focimetry. fo'co-met'ric.

fock'le, 1 fŏk'l; 2 fŏk'l, n. [Ir.] A large torch formed by burning a sheaf of straw on the top of a pole.

fo'cod, 1 fō'kŏd; 2 fō'cŏd, n. Meth. Either of the two circular points at infinity. [< FOCUS + -OID.]

Foc-sa'ni, 1 fok-sē'ni; 2 foc-sā'ni, n. Town in N. Roumania, 90 miles northwest of Galatz; the capital of Vrancea.

fo'cus, 1 fō'kus; 2 fō'cus, vt. [FO'CUSED or FO'CUSSED, FO'CUS†; FO'CUS-ING or FO'CUS-SING.] 1. To adjust (the eye or an optical instrument) so that the focus shall be in the best position for distinct vision or a distinct image, as in a camera.

We are so in the habit of focusing our spy-glasses on our human neighbors that it seems an easy matter to label them. F. A. MERRIAM Birds Through an Opera-Glass p. 1. [M. M. & CO. 1889.]

2. To bring to a focus or point, as rays; direct toward the same point; concentrate. Syn.: see CONCENTRATE.

Focuses of Lenses.

1. Conjugate foci (f and g). 2. Principal or stellar focus. 3. Virtual focus of a concave-concave lens: the full lines show actual paths of rays; those on the right of the lens seem to diverge from a point, as if continuations of the imaginary dotted lines.

fo'cus, n. [FO'CUS-ES or FO'CI, 1 -sī; 2 -ʃī, pl.] 1. A point of meeting of a system of rays after passing through a lens or being reflected by a mirror; the place where an image is formed, as in a camera: said usually of light and radiant heat, more rarely of sound and electromagnetic radiation; as, an acoustic focus.

If we hold a common burning-glass (which is a biconvex lens) up to the sun, the rays will be brought to a focus.
J. N. LOCKYER Elements of Astron. p. 232. [A. 1880.]

2. Geom. (1) One of two points the sum or difference of whose distances from any point of a conic section is constant; in a hyperbola, the difference of the distances; in a parabola one focus is at infinity, and the other is a point whose distance from any point on the curve is equal to the perpendicular distance of the latter point from the directrix. In an elliptical mirror rays from a source of light at one focus are reflected to the other; in a parabolic mirror rays from the focus are rendered parallel on reflection, and rays nearly parallel, as those from the sun, are reflected to the focus; in a hyperbolic mirror rays from one focus appear, after reflection, to diverge from the other.

(2) By extension, a point in some other curve, as a Cartesian oval, having similar properties. 3. Geol. The subterranean point of origin of an earthquake-wave; the centrum. 4. Figuratively, any central point, as of interest or historical importance. 5. Pathol. The region of morbid affection; the chief injury or lesion. [L., hearth.]—actinic focus, the focus of more refrangible light-waves as used in photography.—conjugate foci, two points such that rays from either, after refraction or reflection, either pass through the other or would so pass if their directions were reversed.—depth of f. (Optics), the facility of a lens of producing at the same time clear impressions of objects both far and near: a property of lenses of small aperture.—equivalent f., the magnifying power of a compound lens referred to that of a single lens.—front'-fo'cus, a. Phot. Focused, as a camera, by moving the lens: opposed to back-focus.—in f., placed or adjusted so as to secure distinct vision or a sharp image; resulting from such adjustment; as, the sitter is not in focus.—out of f., not in focus.

CAIRD Kant vol. i, p. 244. [MACM. 1889.]

—principal, solar, or stellar f., the focus for parallel incident rays; roughly, the point where the sun's rays are concentrated by a lens or mirror.—virtual f., a focus where diverging rays would meet if their directions were reversed.

fo'cus-ing, ppr. & verbal n. of FOCUS, v.—fo'cus-ing-cloth', n. A cloth thrown over a photographic camera and the operator's head and shoulders to exclude light other than that coming through the lens.—f.-frame, n. In a camera, the frame that holds the ground-glass on which the image is focused.—f.-glass, n. 1. A small magnifying-glass for examining the image on the ground-glass of a camera. 2. Same as FOCUSING-FRAME.—f.-screen, *n. — f. cæcuminis (Anat.), a band-like fold on the surface of the cerebellum, connecting the posterior superior lobules.— f. of Descartes (Geom.), a plane cubic curve having one anode, one asymptote, and one real inflexion at infinity: its equation is $(4-y)(y-1)^2 = 3x^2y$.

4. Geom. A looped curve.

folk, 1 fōk; 2 fŏk, n. 1. People, collectively or distributively: originally alike in singular and plural, but later folks is often used, especially colloquially and with an adjective (see note below); as, folks used to do differently; poor folks.

The plain common folk, the Democracy of Britain.
CARNEGIE Triumphant Democracy p. 9. [S. 1886.]

2. pl. [Colloq., U. S.] Those of one's family; one's own people; relatives; as, the folks at home; his folks are of Dutch descent. 3. A nation or race; a people: rare in the plural. 4. [Archaic.] The people; commons. 5. [Prov. Eng.] Friends.

As used in Old English folk is a collective noun meaning "people," having a plural of the same form meaning "peoples." In later English the plural form folks was introduced. In present usage the two plurals have become differentiated in sense, so that folk means "peoples," or, as a collective, "people," and folks, especially with an adjective (widely used colloquially in spite of the drawing-room fastidiousness of some writers), means "persons," and the two are no longer to be employed indiscriminately. We say "the common people folk [not folks] call it so," but folks (not folk) at home"; "*Folks*lore is an interesting study." [< AS. folc; cf. folket.— folk'craft'', n. Skill or arts peculiar to or developed by the race or people. — f. dance, n. A national dance, derived from the people, especially the peasantry.— f.-fire, n. Free: said of a lawful fireman.— f.-laws, *n. pl. folk'land, 1 fōk'land''; 2 fōk'lănd', n. Old Eng. Law. Land of the folk or people, of the community, or of the nation: opposed to bookland.

Land held by folk-right under the Anglo-Saxons appear to have been the same as among the Teutonic races on the Continent. Part of the land was granted to individuals by deed or charter, in inheritable estates; a rest remained in the people. The former was called bookland, which meant land held by book, or an instrument in writing; the latter was called folkland, and was occupied in common or by folk-right, subject to whom the community might grant temporary occupancy. Gradually, folkland was converted into bookland, first, by the community itself through the consent of all its members; later, by the King with the consent of his witan or council; and later still, after the Norman conquest, when folkland was held to be the King's land, by the King at his own pleasure.

Among the Anglo-Saxons bookland (allodial land) was allowed to pass to a woman, but not so folkland. BARING-GOULD Germany [S. n. & co. 1881.] p. 82. [S. n. & co. 1881.]

The folkland of England and the seor publious of Rome are the same thing. . . . They both express the land which still belongs to the community as a whole, and of which individuals cannot be more than the occupiers.
E. A. FREEMAN Norman Conquest vol. i. p. 57. [MACM. 1873.]

[For AS. folcland, < folc, folk, + land, land.] folc'land'', folk'land'', folk'lond'', n. The traditions, beliefs, and customs of the common people, or the knowledge of these; specif., the branch of ethnology treating of these and including (1) traditions, (2) proverbial sayings, and (3) popular beliefs and practices. It throws much light upon the branch of sociology that treats of primitive ethics. See SOCIOLOGY.

The work of the brothers Grimm . . . made the folk-lore of the Teutonic race a subject of scientific study, showing that in many cases the nursery-tale which delights the little child to-day, traced through a thousand changes, is found to be a relic of primeval times. HOSMER Short Hist. German Lit. p. 330. [S. 1891.]

— folk'lor''ic, a. Having to do with folk-lore.— folk'lor''ist, n. One devoted to the study of folk-lore.— folk'lo-ris'tic, a.

E. E. HALE What Care? p. 27. [A. BROS. 1879.]

2. To be a natural or logical consequence; as, it follows that he is wrong. [< AS. folgian, folgian.]

Syn.: accompany, attend, chase, come after, ensue, escape after, imitate, obey, observe, pursue, result, succeed. Anything that comes after or goes after another, either in space or in time, is said to follow it. A servant follows or attends his master; a victorious general may follow the retiring enemy merely to watch and hold him in check; he chases or pursues with intent to capture and destroy. the chase is closer and hotter than the pursuit. One event may follow another either with or without special connection; it ensues, if there is some orderly connection; as, the ensuing year; if it results from another, there is some relation of effect, consequence, or inference. A clerk observes his employer's directions. A child obeys his parent's commands, follows or copies his example, imitates his speech and manners. The compositor follows copy; the incoming succeeds the outgoing official.

food, 1 fud; 2 fōōd, n. 1. That which is eaten or drunk for nourishment; aliment; nutriment, in the scientific sense; any substance that, being taken into the body of animal or plant, serves, through processes of assimilation, to build up normal structure or supply the waste of tissue; nutriment; aliment, as distinguished from condiment.

The substances that nourish the body are largely identical with those that compose it, consisting of a number of chemical elements, such as oxygen, hydrogen, carbon, nitrogen, calcium, phosphorus, sulfur, etc., which form a great variety of compounds, as water, fat, starch, and the like. These substances are classified as follows. I. Edible. (1) INORGANIC. (a) Water, forming about 60 per cent. by weight of the body and of most organic matter, which, the physiologically of the utmost importance, does not build tissues nor produce energy. (b) Mineral matter or ash, such as phosphate of lime, potash, soda, etc., which yields little or no energy but is indispensable to the body, as it shares in the formation of bone, aids the digestion, etc. (2) ORGANIC. (a) Proteids, including all compounds containing nitrogen, as the white of eggs (albumen), the curd of milk (casein), the lean and gristle of meat, and the gluten of wheat, which forms the organic basis of bone, muscle, and other tissues and is also burned in the body as fuel, for the production of energy, and in some cases transformed into fat. The proteids compounds are most abundant in the animal foods, the cereals contain them to a considerable degree, especially dried peas and beans. (b) Fats, occurring chiefly in the animal foods, as meat, fish, butter, etc., in some cereals, as oats, maize, and wheat, and also in nuts, and also in some vegetable products, as olives and cottonseed, which are stored as fat, forming a reserve to be drawn upon when the food supply is short. (c) Carbohydrates, including sugar, starch, the cellulose and fiber of plants, etc., as cereal grains, potatoes, milk-sugar, etc., which are easily digested and form a ready source of energy, being also transformed and stored as fat in the body. These different materials can to some extent perform one another's work, protein serving as fuel in the place of fats and carbohydrates, while the latter, when not in excess, nourish tissue-builders, protect the albuminoids from consumption by being themselves consumed. II. Refuse, as bones, egg-shells, skin and seeds of fruits, etc., usually rejected as inedible and would afford no nutriment if they were eaten. Carbohydrates are, as a rule, more digestible than protein and fats, and the proteids of animal food more than of vegetable foods, fats being probably the least digestible of all. Cooking enhances the digestibility of food to a great degree, both by rendering it more palatable and thus stimulating the flow of gastric juices and also by releasing the contained nutritive elements and combining them in more easily assimilable forms. Animal foods are largely composed mainly of complex carbon compounds belonging to four groups, carbohydrates, proteids, amids, and fats. Plants derive nutriment from carbonic acid and water, which their green cells use as the raw material from which the foods are manufactured by photosynthesis. To these may be added various inorganic salts, whose action upon plants is not altogether understood at the present time.

The average daily diet for an adult 5 feet 8 inches in height, weighing 154 pounds, should contain:	In 100 parts.	Each 24 hours.
Water	81.5	5	3	320
Albuminoids or flesh-formers	3.9	0	4	110
Starch, sugar, etc.	10.0	0	11	178
Fat	3.0	0	3	337
Common salt	0.7	0	0	325
Phosphates, potash salts, etc.	0.3	0	0	170

The total daily ration is here shown to weigh 6 pounds, 13 ounces, 128 grains. Of this amount 1 pound, 4 ounces, 245 grains is actual dry food-substance, the remainder, more than 5½ pounds, being water. A. H. CHURCH Food pt. i, p. 49. [c. & H.]

2. Nourishment taken in solid as opposed to liquid form, the latter being differentiated as drink.

The term food, as used herein, shall include all articles used for food, drink, confectionery, or condiment by man or other animals, whether simple, mixed, or compound.

The Food and Drugs Act, June 30, 1906, § 6

In the United States the Food and Drugs Act, sometimes called the National Pure Food Bill (June 1, 1906), directed against foods which are adulterated, misbranded, or which contain poisonous or deleterious substances, has been supplemented by pure-food laws in most of the States where such laws were not already in existence. If foods are below standard grade, or if they are artificially colored or preserved, these facts must now be stated on the label. In England the Sale of Food and Drugs Act covers practically the same ground as to the sale or manufacture of adulterated foods, beverages, drugs, etc., either in general or specifically.

2. Zool. Any part serving as or likened to a foot, as the leg of a crustacean, the tube-foot of an echinoderm, a pseudopodium, or a protozoön; specif., the muscular under surface of the body of a mollusk upon which the animal rests or moves. 3. Any thing corresponding in form, position, or use, or position to an animal's foot. Especially: (1) The arch. part of a column, pedestal, etc., which receives the wearer's foot. (2) A supporting piece, as of a machine. (3) That on which a piece of furniture stands; the extremity of the leg; as, the foot of a table or chair. (4) Any mechanical contrivance in a machine likened to a foot. (5) The lower edge of a four-sided sail. (6) The pedestal of a goblet. (7) The bottom of a basket.

4. The lowest part; bottom; base; foundation; also, the last of a row, line, or series; the inferior part or end; as, the foot of a hill; the foot of a cross; the foot of a bed; the foot of a class.

Where we have seen man sits is the foot of the table.
J. F. CLARKE Every-Day Religion p. 185. fr. a. c. 1886.]

5. (1) The most familiar measure of length: originally based on the length of the human foot, now defined as one-third of a yard. It differs slightly in different countries, the French foot being nearly 1/10 longer than the English or American, which equals .3048 of a meter, or 12 inches. In real-estate transactions the word foot frequently implies frontage, with explained depth; as, the land sold at $100 a foot (i. e., $100 for each front foot, with the depth of the lot — say 125 feet — included). A somewhat similar rule is customary in some places in mining measurements. See the second quotation following.

The foot prevails as a dimension throughout Europe, and has done so since the time of the Romans, by whom, indeed, it was used; its length in different places varying not much more than men's feet vary.
HERBERT SPENCER Recent Discussions p. 202. [a. 1884.]

A foot' is twelve inches in length on the west, including its centre width, whether six inches or sixty feet, and its whole depth down toward the earth's center.
A. D. RICHARDSON Beyond the Mississippi p. 375. [a. c. 1857.]

(2) The unit of board-measure. See BOARD-FOOT. (3) The unit of measure for grindstones: found by adding together the diameter and thickness of the stone in inches and dividing the result by 8: thus a stone 20 inches in diameter and 4 inches thick is known as a 3-foot stone.

6. Soldiers, collectively, who march and fight on foot: distinguished from cavalry; as, a company of foot.

The Macedonian army consisted of thirty thousand foot and two thousand horse.
KNIGHTLEY Greece pt. iii, p. 402. [r. a. c.]

7. Pros. A primary measure of poetic rhythm, corresponding to a bar in music; a group of syllables marked by an ictus or stress on one of them and forming a time-unit in a verse. The regular recurrence of such time-units produces meter, which distinguishes verse from prose. In Greek and Latin prosody the syllables in a foot are long or short, arranged in a certain order, and quantity is the chief factor of the foot. In English the syllables are heavy or light, and the stress or metrical accent is the chief factor of the foot, or measure. The name foot comes probably from the movement of the foot in dancing or marking time. In English poetry the principal feet are iambic, trochaic, anapestic, or dactylic, to agree with the classical feet of corresponding names. See ANAPESTIC; DACTYL; IAMBUS; TROCHEE. Some modern critics hold that the term foot is not strictly applicable in English verse. Compare METER.

8. Mus. (1) A drone-bass. (2) A refrain or chorus; a burden. (3) The measure of the pitch of an organ-stop, as compared with the length of an open pipe of the second C below middle C, which is eight feet; as, a two-foot pipe, i. e., one sounding two octaves above the normal pitch of the digitals. (4) A tube through which wind enters an organ. 9. Bot. (1) In bryophytes, the basal part of the seta: it rests in the archegonium. (2) In pteridophytes, a bulbous organ situated at the base of the sporangium, which draws food for the growing plant from the gametophore.

10. One of the small plates of the carapace of a tortoise-shell. [C.] 11. [Rare.] A blow with the foot. 12. [Rare or Archaic.] A footing; plan; basis: only in the singular. 13†. Animal or par value. 14†. Sediment; feces. The chitinous shells are all imperforate; the arenaceous and calcareous shells are found both perforate and imperforate. The shells are very various in form, and the monothalamous shells being ovate, spherical, stellate, spindleshaped, or tubular, while the polythalamous shells are correspondingly complex and irregular. The majority of the Foraminifera are distinguished entirely by their shells. They are chiefly marine and with rare exceptions are virtually microscopic. Geologically the Foraminifera are traced from the Cambrian period, but have been most abundant since the end of the Paleozoic era.

The Foraminifera are almost all marine animals, living in the sea, from the surface to great depths, sometimes free and sometimes attached to other bodies.

force', n. 1. Any cause that produces, stops, changes, or tends to produce, stop, or change the motion of a body; mechanical power as exerted in pulling, pushing, pressing, attracting, or repelling; especially, that cause which we are conscious of setting in action when we make a muscular effort, and which may be measured in pounds or other units of weight.

Force, properly speaking, is that which is manifested in any change of motion. We know nothing practically of absolute rest, bodies that we consider at rest being actually in motion with the earth. Change of motion, therefore, involves what we call (1) the production, or motion, (2) its increase, (3) its diminution, (4) its cessation, and (5) its deviation from a straight line. When we observe any of these changes we say that a force is acting on the moving body, and measure its total influence during any time by the total change of motion in that time multiplied by the mass of the body. The total force thus measured is known as the impulsive force when the change is sudden. The force at any instant, or accelerating force, is proportional to the acceleration, or rate of increase of velocity at that instant, multiplied by the mass of the body. (For cases in which there is no change of motion, owing to a balance of forces, see EQUILIBRIUM.) Change of motion in a body or particle, in every case that we can observe, is due to the presence of another body or particle, and this always simultaneously moves in such a way as to show that the force acting on it must be equal and opposite to that acting on the first body. A change of motion therefore implies two forces, which may be called the action and the reaction, or both may be considered together and called a stress. A change of motion also implies always a transference of energy, but the energy possessed by a body is quite another matter, for the same force exerted on it by it, which force is equal to the rate at which energy is given to the body or taken from it, per unit of distance. Force has directions, energy has not. Some writers on physics object to the use of the word force in any way that implies its objectivity, and declare that energy is the objective thing considered, and that force is merely its rate of change. See ENERGY.

What I have already said . . . leaves absolutely no doubt as to the only terms and correct translation of the word Force. It is obviously to be applied to any pull, push, pressure, tension, attraction or repulsion. TAIT Recent Advances p. 354. [MACM. 1876.]

2. Moral beauty, any operating or operative energy; any active agency or power tending to change the state of matter; as, the force of heat or of electricity. 3. A tendency or power in action that seems analogous to physical force; any moral, social, or political cause or aggregate of causes; as, the forces by which a republic was created; the forces that shaped Christianity.

Call it religion, patriotism, sympathy, the enthusiasm for humanity, or the love of God—give it what name you will—there is yet a force which overcomes and drives out selfishness; a force which is the electricity of the moral universe; a force beside which all others are weak.
HENRY GEORGE Progress and Poverty p. 416. [H. &]

4. Power or energy, whether physical or mental, as called in an individual agent, usually a person, by which resistance is overcome or purposes or results accomplished; strength; vigor; as, a preacher of great force. 5. Power or energy considered as exerting constraint or compulsion upon another person or object; the ability to coerce; coercion; as, they captured him by force; persuasion is better than force.

The end of war is to procure by force the justice which cannot otherwise be obtained. Henry Clay Amer. Orator. vol. i. p. 80.

6. That quality in anything which tends to produce an effect on the mind or will; the capacity to convince, convict, or move; significance; weight; import; as, the force of an argument; the force of a word.

There are some impressions that come upon us with the force of prophecies. H. W. BEECHER Norwood p. 142. [s. 1868.]

7. Law. (1) Binding effect; efficacy; validity; as, the force of a contract or a treaty.

It [a promise] is nevertheless of no force unless founded upon a consideration. PARSONS Contracts vol. i, p. 466. [L. n. & co.]

(2) Lawful violence; as, a message sent by force of arms. 8. An organized or aggregated body of individuals, as of persons or animals, considered as capable of exerting power unitedly; especially, a military aggregate; an army; usually, a great force of ants; an embodied force of a police force. 9. Rhet. The quality of style that gives vigor to discourse; energy; animation; strength. See ENERGY. 10†. Importance; weight; consequence. [F., < LL. fortia, < L. fortis, strong.] SYN.: see ENERGY; FORCIBLY; IMPULSE; POWER.— active electromotive force (Elec.), in an alternating circuit, an electromotive force equal to the difference between the instantaneous values of electromotive forces at any given instant) which is effective in producing a current in that circuit.— central f., a force constantly directed toward the same point, called its center.— centrifugal f., the reaction of a body against a force that is causing it to move in a curved path; a fictitious force apparently balancing a central force.— centripetal f., a force directed toward a center, as toward a point or curve.— chemical f., that power which holds together or tends to unite unlike chemical atoms; chemical affinity.— coercive f. or coercive f., see COERCIVE.— conservative f., a force that depends only on the relative position of the bodies concerned, as gravitation and electric and magnetic attraction.— directive f., a couple or a single force which maintains a body to point in a definite direction and maintains it in that position.— force'-function, n. Math. A function expressing the energy of a system of bodies in terms of the relative positions of its parts.— f.-line, n. A line of force. See LINE.— f.-nozle, n. A pipe that discharges the exhaust steam into a chimney, thereby creating a forced draft.— fresh f., in Scots law, a respite of assault committed within the preceding 40 days.— in f., still living; enforceable, as a law.— living f., the kinetic energy of a moving body, or, formerly, also this energy, being the power of turning into the square of the velocity; the vis viva.— molar f., a force, as gravitation or magnetic attraction, acting between masses of matter.— molecular f., a force acting between molecules, as cohesion, which is insensible at sensible distances.— tangential f., a force acting in the direction of the tangent to the curved path in which a body moves, at the point where the force is at the instant.

force', n. [Prov. Eng.] A cascade; waterfall.

Marquis's Younger Son.—Like DUKE'S YOUNGER SON.

Mayor.—In formal documents, in Great Britain, "The Right Worshipful the Mayor ——"; but in letters, simply "The Mayor." For U. S., see HONORABLE.

Member of Parliament.—The letters M. P. are added to his usual name.

Monsignor.—Letters are addressed: "The Right (or Very) Reverend Monsignor ——." Letters commence: "Right (or Very) Reverend Sir."

Naval Officer.— Letters are addressed: "The Admiral of the Navy of the United States," or "Admiral ——, Commanding United States Navy," or "Captain ——, U. S. N." Letters commence: "Sir." (In the Navy the name, title, and place are at the end of the letter.)

Officers of the Navy and Army.— Their rank in the service, if above subalterns, is always prefixed to any other title they may possess: thus, "Captain the Lord John ——." See ARMY OFFICER; NAVAL OFFICER.

Pope.— Letters are addressed: "His Holiness, the Pope," or "Our Most Holy Father, Pope ——." Letters commence: "Most Holy Father."

Postmaster-General. See CABINET OFFICER.

President.— Letters are addressed: "The President, White House," or "The President of the United States, White House," or "His Excellency the President of the United States." Letters commence: "Mr. President" or "Sir."

President of U. S. Senate.— Letters are addressed: "The Honorable the President of the Senate of the United States," or "The Honorable ——, President of the Senate." Letters commence: "Sir."

President of State Senate.— Letters are addressed: "The Honorable ——, President of the Senate of ——. Letters commence: "Sir."

President of College or University.— Letters are addressed: "Pres. ——, ["D. D." or the like]," or "——, President of ——College." Letters commence: "Sir" or "Dear Sir."

Prince.— "His Royal Highness Prince ——," or "His Royal Highness the Duke of ——," when the Prince is also a Duke. In practice the initials H. R. H. are usually substituted for the words. A letter begins "Sir," not "My Lord Duke"; and the mode of reference is "Your Royal Highness."

Princess.— "Her Royal Highness the Princess ——," or "The Duchess of ——" (as the case may be). Letters commence: "Madam," and address her as "Your Royal Highness."

Prince's Wife, the of inferior rank, like a Princess by birth.

Privy Councilor.— "The Right Honorable ——."

Privy Councilors' wives and children, as such, have no titles.

Professor.— Letters are addressed: "Prof. ——, ["D. D." or the like]." Letters commence: "Sir," "Dear Sir," "Dear Prof. ——."

Queen.— "The Queen's Most Excellent Majesty." Letters commence: "Madam," and address her as "Your Majesty," or "The Lord ——— presents his duty to your Majesty."

Representative. See HONORABLE.

Secretary of Agriculture, State, War, etc. See CABINET OFFICER.

Senator, Federal or State. See HONORABLE.

Speaker of the House.— Letters are addressed: "The Honorable the Speaker of the House of Representatives." Letters commence: "Sir" or "Mr. Speaker."

Supreme Court: Chief Justice.— Letters are addressed: "The Chief Justice of the United States," or "The Honorable ——, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States." Letters commence: "Mr. Chief Justice," "Sir," or "May it please your Honor."

Supreme Court; Associate Justice.— Letters are addressed "Honorable ——," Associate Justice of the Supreme Court." Letters commence: "Mr. Justice," or "Sir," or "Your Honor."

Vice-President.— Letters are addressed: "The Vice-President," or "The Honorable the Vice-President of the United States," or "The Hon. ——, Vice-President of the United States." Letters commence: "Mr. Vice-President," or "Sir."

Viceroy.— Letters are addressed: "His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland" ["the Viceroy of India" or "the Governor-General of Canada"].

Viscount.— "The Right Honorable Lord Viscount ——," or, less formally, "The Lord Viscount ——." Letters commence: "My Lord," and address him as "Your Lordship."

Viscountess.— "The Right Honorable the Viscountess ——," or, less formally, "The Viscountess ——." Letters commence: 'Madam," and address her as "Your Ladyship."

Viscount's Daughter.— LADY'S DAUGHTER.

Viscount's Son.— LORD BARON'S SON.

Viscount's Son's Wife.— Like BARON'S SON'S WIFE.

The Constitution of the United States provides that no title of nobility shall be granted by the Government, and that no person holding any office of profit or trust under it shall, without the consent of Congress, accept any title, etc., from any king, prince, or foreign state. The President of the United States and the Governor of Massachusetts are the only citizens possessing as officials a title by legislative act, and in both cases the word is "Excellency." Governors of other States are given the same title by courtesy.

Custom formerly added the titles of various officials to the names of their wives when used in introductions or conversation: "Mrs. President ——," "Mrs. Justice ——," "Mrs. Governor ——," but the usage does not extend to daughters. The disposition on the part of the government and the most cultured citizens is to ignore titles as far as propriety will permit.

-f. species, n. Biol. A species provisionally founded on a single stage of development; used until the complete or perfect stages necessary for a proper classification are discovered, as, a formæspecies of bacteria or fungi. -f.-word, n. An independent word, used in the same function as a prefix or suffix; a word used as a grammatical modifier, as an auxiliary verb. —general f., n. Phil. A generic form. —ground-f., *n. 3. Having regard to or done in accordance with a scrupulous observance of social forms, customs, and etiquette; punctilious; ceremonious. 4. Of or pertaining to form as opposed to matter; as, the formal laws of thought. See MATTER; CAUSE.

Formal cause and final cause must be identical and the world-process must be a revolution of the lineaments of the pure form or pure self-activity that causes it to be and to change.

W. T. HARRIS Hegel's Logic p. 32. [a. c. o. 1890.]

5†. Normal; sound; sane; like, shapely; handsome. 6†. Represented in form; personified. [< F. formel, < L. formalis, < forma, form.] SYN.: see CEREMONIOUS.— formal abduction (Logic), a process which is abduction only in form, and subject to but little error, as in abstraction.— for'mal-ness, n. [Rare.] The character or condition of being formal; as, the formalness of a letter.

for'mal'de-hyde,] for-mal'de-hîd; 2 fôr-mal'de-hîyd, n. A colorless gas (CH_2O) obtained variously by the partial oxidation of methyl alcohol, largely used as an antiseptic and as a disinfectant, for which it is prepared by solution in water or mixture with glycerin; also used in forming such trade preparations as formalith, formalol, etc. Compare FORMIC ALDEHYDE. [< FORM(-IC) + ALDEHYDE.]— formaldehyde bisulfite (Chem.), a crystalline, anhydrous derivative of sodium bisulfite and formaldehyde.— f. generator, a formaldehyde lamp.— f. regenerator, a portable machine for making formaldehyde gas and introducing it into a room for disinfecting purposes.

— f. tannin-albuminate, a compound of tannin, albumin, and formaldehyde, an antiseptic astringent insoluble in the stomach but decomposed in the intestines. —f. tanno-albuminate†,—f. urea, a derivative of formalin and urea.

for'mal-esque',] for'mal-esk'; 2 fôr'mal-ésk', a. Tending toward a type of form; specif., in landscape-painting, not influenced or affected by surrounding architectural or engineering features.

for'ma-lin,] fôr'ma-lin; 2 fôr'ma-lin, n. An aqueous solution of formaldehyde: a trade name.— formalin gelatin (Chem.), a coarse powder derived by evaporation from a solution of gelatin treated with formalin. formaldehyde gelatin.— for'ma-lin-ize, vt. [-IZED; -IZING.] Bacteriol. To apply formalin to (a culture); imbue with formalin.

for'ma-li'na,] 1 fôr'ma-lî'na; 2 fôr'ma-lî'na, n. A compound of lead and formaldehyde, used as an inhalant in consumption. [< FORMALDEHYDE.]

for'mal-ism,] 1 fôr'mal-izm; 2 fôr'mal-îşm, n. 1. Scrupulous and critical observance of forms, rules, and conventional usages, especially in religious worship or in social life. 2. Philos. (1) The doctrine that ascribes all real existences to the formative activity of preexisting ideas; Platonic or ancient idealism. (2) "The doctrine that the accepted forms of logic explain every mode of conception and inference. SYN.: see AFFECTATION.

for'mal-ist,] 1 fôr'mal-ist; 2 fôr'mal-îst, n. 1. A scrupulous observer of forms; especially, one to whom form is merely given to the forms and not to the substance of religion. 2. Philos. One who holds the doctrine that matter is non-existent, but that the preexistent formative ideas are the only reality; also, [cap.] formalists. < formal; see FORMAL.]— for'mal-is'tic, a. Characterized by formalism.

for'mal'i-ty,] for-mal'i-ti; 2 fôr-mal'i-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tîz.] 1. The state or character of being formal; close adherence to any fixed forms or standards; conventionality. 2. A mere form without spirit or vital power; an unmeaning ceremonial or conventionality. 3. A proper order of action; a fixed and customary method or practise; as, formalities of business. 4. Art. Rigid observance of rules so as to sacrifice life and originality. 5. Philos. (1) With Duns Scotus and his followers, a formal but not intrinsic mode of being, as the quality or quantity of things. (2) With Kant, (a) any active principle which shaped knowledge so as to give to it universality and necessity; (b) the character of pertaining to the necessary and universal form of thought. 6†. Customary conduct or appearance. 7†. Soundness; validity. †. pl. Academic or other official dress. SYN.: see FORM.

form-am'id,] fôrm-am'id, -id or -ăid; 2 fôrm-âm'id, -id or -aid. for'mam-ide,] -id, n. 1. A clear colorless oily liquid ($CH(CO.NH_2)_2$), obtained from ethyl formate. [< FORMATE + AMIDE.]— form-am'i-din, n. Chem. A hypothetical substance, $CH(NH.NH_2)_2$, existing only in the form of its derivatives. form'am'i-dine†.

form-an'i-lid,] 1 fôrm-an'i-lid, -lid or -laid; 2 fôrm-ân'i-lid, -lid or -laid. for'man-i-lide,] -lîd or -laid, n. Chem. A yellow insoluble compound ($C_6H_5N_2O$), resulting from the action of formic acid on anilin. [< FORMIC + ANILID.]

for'mant,] 1 fôr'mant; 2 fôr'mant, n. Phon. The tone of constant pitch of a vowel sound, as spoken vowels, independent of the tone in which it is sung; also, its characteristic resonance. E. W. SCRIPTURE Exper. Phonetics p. 39. [a.] L. formans, pres. part. of formare, form.]

for-mat',] for-mat' or (F.) fôr'mâ'; 2 fôr-mât' or (F.) fôr'mâ', n. [F.] The form, size, and general style of the get-up of a book, including the face of type, the quality of the paper, and the character of the binding used.

for'mate,] 1 fôr'mêt; 2 fôr'mât, n. Chem. A salt of formic acid.

for-ma'tion,] for-mê'shon; 2 fôr-mâ'shon, n. 1. The act or process of forming or of making by the combination of materials; also, the taking on of specific form; development; as, the formation of crystals; the formation of theories. 2. The arrangement of parts so as to give distinctness and individuality; relative disposition of parts; manner in which anything is shaped or composed.

It is a cardinal principle in elocution that the formation of sentences determines the mode of delivery.

A. J. UPSON in Homiletic Review Mar., 1890, p. 208.

3. Mil. The disposition of troops as in column, line, or square; as, the usual formation is in line, or in two and in triple line. FROUDE Cæsar ch. 22, p. 388. 4. Anything that is formed; a thing regarded in reference to form or structure; as, a curious or beautiful formation. 5. Geol. (1) Enduring or mineral masses, or rock-masses, named with reference to mode of origin; as, an alluvial formation. (2) A series of associated rocks, having similar conditions of origin, or some common physical character; as, the Silurian formation. (3) [Init.] A subdivision of rocks of the same geological age. (4) U. S. Geol. Survey. The stratigraphic unit adopted for representation on geologic maps, consisting of an assemblage of beds of uniform or uniformly varying lithologic character, differing from the beds above and below.

Altho a subdivision of a system, and usually of a series, it is properly a cartographic unit, and not of fixed taxonomic rank, as a formation in some areas may be stratigraphically equivalent to several formations, or even to a whole series, in other areas.

Some formations are named from the locality where typically displayed, as the Clinton (N. Y.) formation, the Wind River (Wyo.) f.; others are named from the character of the rock in addition, the word formation being omitted, as the Potsdam sandstone, the Edwards limestone. See CHART OF GEOLOGICAL HISTORY, under GEOLOGY. 6. Biol. Anaggregation of plants occupying a special habitat or situation; as, an aquatic formation. [< L. formatio(n-), < formo; see FORM, v.]— climatic formation (Physiog.), a plant formation that has been conditioned by the amount of rainfall. disclimax, edaphic f., a plant formation that has been controlled by soil influences rather than climatic conditions. fluvial f., any geological formation composed of river-sediment or due to river-action.— free-cell f., a mode of internal cell-division comprising the forming of cell-walls about protoplasmic nuclei, the cells being unattached and part of the mother-cell cytoplasm being left unused. A common example is the formation of the ascospores of many fungi and lichens.— plant'-for'ma'tion, n. See PLANT SOCIETY.— Stockton f. (Geol.), the lowest formation of the Newark group in the Connecticut and adjoining States.— for'ma-tion-al, a. Relating to formations.

form'a-tive,] 1 fôrm'a-tiv; 2 fôrm'a-tîv, a. 1. Having form'a-tîv,] power to form, shape, or mold; tending to definite development; plastic; as, formative influences. 2. Of or pertaining to formation or development.

Communities and commonwealths, like men, have their childhood, which is the formative period.

STRONG Our Country p. 145. [a. s. v. o.]

3. Having an inherent capacity for growth and development; germinal; living; as, formative protoplasm. 4. Gram. Serving or aiding to form, as a prefix, suffix, combining form, or inflectional ending; as, a formative element.

The whole body of suffixes, of formative endings, is divided into two principal classes: first, primary, or such as form derivatives directly from roots; second, secondary, or such as form derivatives from other derivatives, from themes containing already a formative element.

form'a-tive, n. Gram. Any element added to a word to give it a new and special form and character, as a prefix or suffix.

for-ma'tor, n. Same as CONFORMATOR.

For'mi'gny',] I fôr'mi'nyŕ; 2 fôr'mi'nyŕ, n. A town in Calvados department, France, where the French defeated the English 1/15 1450.

for'min,] fôr'min; 2 fôr'min, n. Chem. 1. A white crystalline powder (CH_6N_4), obtained by the action of formaldehyde on ammonia, used as an antiseptic. 2. Either of two glyceryl salts of formic acid obtained by heating glycerin with oxalic acid and designated as monoformin ($C_3H_5(OH)_2(HCO_2)$, and diformin ($C_3H_5(OH)(HCO_2)_2$). [< FORM-.]

for'mine, n. Same as UROTROPIN.

form'ing,] fôrm'iŋ; 2 fôrm'iŋ, n. The act or process of making into or making by a fixed form or workshop; specif., the exact shaping of ship-timbers after their conversion.— form'ing-ŕ'ron, n. A blacksmiths' swaging-block.— f.-machine, n. A machine which forms the material it passes into a fixed shape.— f.-tool, n. The rolls belonging to a forming-machine; also, the machine itself.— f.-tool, n. A special lathe-tool which cuts work to a required shape.

form'less,] fôrm'les; 2 fôrm'lĕs, a. Having no determinate form; wanting regular shape; shapeless.— form'-less-ly, adv.— form'less-ness, n.

Europe receives as its law of the highest principle, perfect form, rather than perfect formlessness, perfect fulness of being, rather than perfect emptiness. W. T. HARRIS Hegel's Logic p. 105. [s. c. a. 1890.]

for'mo-form,] fôr'mo-fôrm; 2 fôr'mo-fôrm, n. A disinfectant which contains oxid of zinc, starch, thymol, and formaldehyde. [< FORMALDEHYDE + FORM-.]

for'mo-gua-nam'ine,] I fôr'mo-gwa-nam'in, -in or -ĭne: for'mo-gua-nam'ine,] 2 fôr'mo-gwa-nâm'in, -in or -ĭne, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ($C_4H_7N_5$), formed by heating guanidin at 200° C.

for'mol,] fôr'mŏl or -mōl; 2 fôr'mŏl or -mōl, n. Chem. Same as FORMALIN. [< FORM- + -OL.]

for'mo-ni'trile,] fôr'mo-nī'trĭl; 2 fôr'mo-nī'trĭl, n. Chem. Same as HYDROCYANIC ACID. [< FORMIC + NITRILE.]

for'mo-py'rin,] I fôr'mo-pyŕ'rin, -run or -rĭn; 2 fôr'mo-pyŕ'-for'mo-pyr'ine,] rin, -rĭn, or -rīn, n. A crystalline condensation product formed by mixing formaldehyde with antipyrin. It is used as an antipyretic and has antiseptic properties. [< FORM (ALDEHYDE) + (ANTI) PYRIN.]

For-mo'sa, 1 for-mō'sa; 2 fôr-mō'sa, n. 1. An island in the China Sea; ceded to Japan by China, May 8, 1895; 13,458 sq. m.; now called Taiwan. See TAIWAN. 2. A territory in Argentina. [< Pg. formosa, beautiful.]

For-mo'san, 1 for-mō'san; 2 fôr-mō'san, n. 1. A native or resident of the island of Formosa, especially one of the Malaic branch of the Turanian languages.— For-mo'san, a.— The Formosan, same as GEORGE PSALMANAZAR.

for'mo-sin,] fôr'mo-sĭn; 2 fôr'mo-sĭn, n. Chem. A mixture of at least two sugars obtained by the polymerization of formaldehyde under the action of caustic lime.

for'mu-la,] fôr'miu-la; 2 fôr'mū-la, n. [-LAS or -LÆ, 1 -li; 2 -lē, pl.] 1. An exact method or form of words prescribed as a model for use in any action, negotiation, or statement, or to be used on certain occasions or under certain circumstances; fixed rule or set form. 2. Eccl. A confession of faith, or a formal statement of doctrine; a written creed.

It requires but to read the two formulæ [of St. Paul and St. John] side by side to perceive the characteristic differences. Farrar, Early Days of Christianity p. 505. [s. c. a. p. d.]

3. Med. A prescription; recipe. 4. Math. A rule expressed in algebraic symbols. 5. Chem. A group of symbols showing the composition or structure of a definite compound.

Chemical formulæ are (1) empirical, or composition formulas, when only the constituents and their proportions are shown, as in CH_2O, the empirical or simplest atomic formula for acetic acid; or (2) rational formulas, or constitutional when the composition of a compound is shown (a) by its separation into radicals as in $H_2O.SO_4$, the constitutional formula for sulfuric acid, or (b) by the connecting bonds, as in H—O—H, the constitutional formula of water. In the latter case they are called also graphic or structural formulas. For linkage f. and valence f. see the qualifying words and additional formulæ see below. 6. Rom. Law. Directions sent from a higher court to a lower, as from the pretors, who sat as magistrates, to a judge, for the adjudication of cases not covered by the regular order of procedure. The formula usually consisted of the following three sections: the demonstratio, which set forth the facts alleged by the plaintiff; the intentio, containing the demand made against his adversary by the plaintiff, and which was compelled to meet the law governing the facts alleged, and the condemnatio, which directed the judge to either condemn or absolve in accordance with the facts. This system was superseded by the extraordinaria judicia, which prevailed in the third period of the Roman system and by which the supreme authority assumed the decision of all questions. 7. Philol. A formula, form.] SYN.: see LAW.— Clippoletti's, D'Arcy's, Francis's, or Kutter's formula, algebraic formulas employed by hydraulic engineers in computing or determining the flow of water at a given point.— Descartes's f. (Optics), a formula for expressing the equation between the angles of incidence and refraction.— dimensional f. (Alg.), a formula for measuring the relation between the fundamental units of time, length, and mass, and the units of other physical quantities.— dualistic f. (Chem.), a formula based on the dualistic theory of chemical combination, that all electrolytic compounds are possessed of opposite electrical properties.— Fechner's f. (Psychophys.), a formula based on the law that the intensity of a sensation is proportional to the stimulus applied. Fechner's fundamental f.†.— Fechner's metric f. (Psychophys.), a formula demonstrating that the intensity of a sensation increases as the logarithm of its stimulus.— Ferrel's and Mc'Cleary's f., a formula expressing the relation between barometric gradient and accompanying winds.— f. of Arcmarius, the algebraic formula deduced by the author of Arcmarius's method of finding the generated force varies with the metals employed in the couple.— f. of Stefan (Physics), a formula expressing the relation between the energy of a black body and the absolute temperature.— Fresnel's f. (Optics), a formula for computing the intensity of a reflected ray in terms of the angle of incidence and the interior index of refraction.— Gerard's f., same as MUSSELMAN FORMULA.— Gordan's f. (Inorg.), an empirical formula relative to the strength of struts, worked out by Gordon and modified by Rankine. It agrees best with those forms of construction where the struts of normal proportions when certain coefficients are treated as empirical constants. It is $p = \frac{P}{S}\left(1 \pm \alpha \frac{l^2}{b^2}\right)$, where a is a constant depending upon the form of section and the composing material, p the axial load in pounds, P the induced stress, S the cross sectional area of the strut, l the length of the strut, and b the least radius of the cross section.— Holmes's f., a formula for the expansion of the thermoelectric force at the junction of two differently heated portions of a metal.— hypsometric f., a formula expressing the above phenomena in terms of the density and pressure of the mercury in the hypsometer.— Huygbert's f. (Meteor), a formula for computing the mean wind-direction: in its original form introduced by J. H. Lambert in 1777.— Lame's f. (Math.), for measuring the strain in a cylindrical body subjected to pressure from within and without.— Le Chatelier's f., see LE CHATELIER'S LAW.— Mallard's f., a formula for calculating the chemical formula expressing molecular weight in addition to percentage composition.— Moseley's f. (Nav. Arch.), a formula for determining the displacement of a vessel corresponding to a given angle.— muscle f., Garrod's method of expressing the leg-muscle formation in birds: the letters A, B, X, Y representing the important muscles, and + or — the presence or absence of the same.— nerve f., a means for describing the plan of the spinal nerves among the lower vertebrates. In certain fishes some of the nerves seem to have become lost owing to their confinement in the circles of the pelvis and pectus.— Neumann's f., a modification of Fresnel's formula.— phalangeal f., a means of enumerating the joints in the digits of the fore and hind limbs, as of certain reptiles, reckoning from the inside to the outside.— Van der Waal's f. (Physics), a formula expressing the relation between volume and pressure in gases. It differs from Boyle's law by taking into consideration the attraction of the molecules of the gas on one another.— for'mu-la'ic, a. Of or pertaining to a formula.— for'mu-lar. I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to a formula. 2†. In proper form: formal. II†. n. An example; pattern.— for'mu-lar-is'tic, a. Pertaining to or exhibiting formularization.— for'mu-lar-ize, vt. To reduce to or express in a formula; formulate.— for'mu-lar-is¢'t—or'mu-lar-i-za'tion or -sa'tion, n.

for'mu-la-ry, 1 fôr'miu-lē-ri; 2 fôr'mū-la-ry, a. 1. Exactly stated or clearly prescribed, as in a formula; having the nature of a formula; exact; precise; formal; rigid, ritual. 2. [Rare.] Rigidly observant of set forms or rules.

for'mu-la-ry, n. [-RIES, 1 -riz; 2 -riz, pl.] 1. A compilation or collection of forms, formulas, doctrines, or precedents; as, the National Formulary of Unofficial [pharmaceutical] Preparations. 2. Specif., a church ritual.

Let us so treat unspirited formularies as to subject them, in the minds of the popular feeling, to the inspired standards, no more, no less. AUSTIN PHELPS Theory of Preaching p. 53. [s. 1882.

3. A prescribed form; formula.

The Press . . . echoes back the prescribed formularies of the government. SPENCER in Am. Century p. 508. [c. n. s. n. 1888.]

for'mu-late, 1 fôr'miu-lēt; 2 fôr'mū-lāt, vt. [-LAT'ED; -LAT'ING.] To express in or as in a formula; put or state in exact, concise, and systematic form; make a formula of or for; fix determinately.— for'mu-la'tion, n. The act, process, or result of formulating.— for'mu-la-to-ry, a. [Rare.] Of or pertaining to formulation.

for'mu-lism,] I fôr'miu-lizm; 2 fôr'mū-lĭzm, n. Observance or use of or adherence to formulas.

Yes, hollow Formulism . . . is visibly and even rapidly declining. CARLYLE Heroes and Hero-Worship p. 208. [s. 1870.]

for'mu-list, n.— for'mu-lis'tic, a.

for'mu-lize,] I fôr'miu-lēiz; 2 fôr'mū-lĭz, vt. & vi. [-LIZED; -LIZ'ING.] 1. To make formal. 2. To formulate. for'mu-list'—for'mu-li-za'tion or -sa'tion, n.— for'mu-liz'er or -lis'er, n.

form'y, 1 fôrm'i; 2 fôrm'y, a. Her. Same as PATTÉ.

for'myl, 1 fôr'mil; 2 fôr'mĭl, n. Chem. The hypothetical univalent radical CHO, constituting the base of formic acid. [< FORM- + -YL.]— for'myl-ic, a.

fornt, adv. Fore.— forn-cast'†, vt. To forecast.

For'na-ca'li-a, 1 fôr'na-kā'li-a; 2 fôr'na-cā'li-a, n. [L.] Rom. Antiq. The annual festival of the Fornacalia, or ovens and of the baking of bread, held at Rome in February.

for-nac'le, 1 for-nas'lk; 2 fôr-nāc'le, a. [Rare.] Belonging to or of the nature of a furnace or oven. [< L. fornax, furnace.]

For'na-ri'na, 1 fôr'na-rī'na; 2 fôr'nā-rī'nā, La. Art. 1. A portrait of Margherita, the daughter of a baker of Rome, painted by Rafael and now in the Barberini Pal. in Rome. 2. One of several other similar paintings, generally ascribed to Sebastiano del Piombo, of which the most notable is in the Villa Borghese.

For'nax, 1 fôr'naks; 2 fôr'nāks, n. Rom. Myth. 1. A goddess, the patroness of bakers: recognized as identical with Vesta. 2. A constellation near Cetus. [L., lit. furnace.]

for-nens't, prep. Same as FORENENST. for-nent'†.

for'ni-cal, 1 fôr'ni-kŏl; 2 fôr'ni-cal, a. Of or pertaining to a fornix.

for'ni-cate, 1 fôr'ni-kēt; 2 fôr'ni-cāt, vi. [-CAT'ED; -CAT'ING.] To commit fornication; have illicit sexual intercourse: said of unmarried persons. [< LL. fornicatus, pp. of fornicare, < L. fornix (fornic-), brothel.]— for'ni-ca'tion, n.

for'ni-ca'tor, n.— for'ni-ca'tress, n. for'ni-ca'trix†.

for'ni-cate, a. 1. Arched; vaulted; overarched, as by the scales overarching the mouth of the corolla in hound's-tongue (Cynoglossum). 2. Resembling a fornix. 3. Of, pertaining to, or near the fornix; as, the fornicate convolution. [< L. fornicatus, < fornix (fornic-), arch.]

for'ni-ca-ted†; for-nic'i-form†.

for'ni-ca-tion, 1 fôr'ni-kā'shon; 2 fôr'ni-cā'shon, n. 1. Illicit sexual intercourse of unmarried persons; also, loosely, such intercourse of an unmarried person with a person of the opposite sex, whether married or unmarried. 2. In Scriptural usage, often, adultery or harlotry, or incest; hence, idolatry.

All acting for pleasure before use, or instead of use, is, in one word, Fornication.† That is the accurate meaning of the words 'harlotry,' or 'fornication,' as used in the Bible, wherever they occur spoken of nations. RUSKIN Fors Clavigera vol. vi, p. 111. [w. & s. 1886.]

for'ni-ca-tor, 1 fôr'ni-kā'tor; 2 fôr'ni-cā'ctor.

for'ni-ca'tress, n. The state of being fornicate or vaulted; a vaulting or arching over. [< L. fornicatio(n-), < fornicatus; see FORNICATE, a.]

for'ni-col'um, 1 fôr'na-kol'um; 2 fôr'ni-cōl'um, n. [Rare. Same as FORNIX, 3.

for'nix, 1 fôr'niks; 2 fôr'nĭks, n. [FOR'NI-CES, 1 -ni-sīz; 2 -ni-cēs, pl.] [L.] 1. Anat. A vaulted or reflected surface; as, the fornix or roof of the pharynx; also, the bands of white fibers that arch from before backward over the ventricles of the brain. See illus. under TELA. 2. Conch. (1) The arched part of a bivalve shell under the umbo. (2) The arched upper valve of a bivalve that has unequal valves. 3. Bot. A very small arched scale or crest in the throat of some corollas. 4. Arch. A vault or arch, commonly one within a building.

Forn'jot, 1 fôrn'yŏt; 2 fôrn'yŏ, n. In early Finnish or Celtic mythology, an ancient giant, father of Ægir, the god of the deep sea, of Loge, the flame, and of Kvare, the wind. For'vi'ci, n.

for'pam'per†, vt. To pamper to excess.— for-pass't, v. I. t. To pass by unobserved. II. t. To excel; outstrip.

for'pet, 1 fôr'pĕt; 2 fôr'pĕt, n. [Scot.] The fourth of a peck.

for'prize',] I fôr'prēz'; 2 fôr'prīz', n. [Archaic.] An exception or a reservation. fore'prize'†; fore'prize'†.

for'ra, 1 fôr'a; 2 fôr'a, a. [Scot.] Farrow; as, a forra cow.

for'rage, n. Same as FORAGE. for'rit†.

for'rat, 1 for'at; 2 fôr'at, a. [Dial.] Forward. for'ret†.

For'res, 1 for'es; 2 fôr'ĕs, n. An ancient manufacturing town in Inverness-shire, Scotland: residence of early Scottish kings; part of the action of Macbeth takes place there.

for'rest, 1 for'est; 2 fôr'ĕst, n. 1. Edwin (1/1830–12/1872), an American tragic actor. 2. Sir John (2/1847–7/1918), an Australian explorer, surveyor, and statesman: first premier and treasurer of Western Australia, 1890–1901. 3. Nathan Bedford (7/1821–3/1877), a Confederate general; took Fort Pillow, 1864. 4. A city, county-seat of St. Francis county, Ark.

For'rester, 1 for'es-tar; 2 fôr'ĕs-tĕr, Fanny. The pen-name of Emily C. Judson.

for'row, 1 for'o; 2 fôr'o, n. [Scot.] Not with calf: farrow.

fors‡, t. 3 fōrs, 2 fōrs, n. [Local, Eng.] Rough sheep's hair.

for-sake', t. for-sēk'; 2 fōr-sāk', n. FOR-SOOK'; FOR-SAK'EN or (Poet.) FOR-SOOK'; FOR-SAK'ING.] 1. To leave or withdraw from (a person, place, association, etc.); abandon; depart from; desert; also, to cast off; reject; as, to forsake one's friends; his courage forsook him.

Horror hath taken hold upon me because of the wicked that forsake thy law Ps. cxix, 53.

2†. To decline to grant; deny. [< AS. forsacan, < for (see FOR-) + sacan, contend.] Syn.: see ABANDON.—for-sak'en, pa. Deserted; abandoned; hence, forlorn.—for-sak'en-ly, adv.—for-sak'en-ness, n.—for-sak'er, n.

for-say'‡, vt. To renounce; forbid.—fors-com'fist, n. [Scot.] 1. Exhausted by heat. 2. Overcome by a strong odor.—fors-ed', pa. [Prov. or Archaic.] 1. To look down upon; overlook; neglect. 2. To see clearly.

for-set', 1 for-set'; 2 fōr-sēt', vt. To get in the way of; impede hostilely. [< AS. forsettan.]

For-set'e, 1 for-set'i; 2 fōr-sēt'e, n. Norse Myth. The peace making god, dwelling in Glitner. All disputants who seek his tribunal depart reconciled. See GLITNER. For-set'it.

Fors For-tu'na, 1 fōrz for-tū'nə; 2 fōrz fōr-tū'na. [L.] Same as FORTUNA.

for-shape'‡, vt. To change or mar the shape of; transform.

For'shey, 1 fōr'shi; 2 fōr'shy, Caleb Goldsmith (?/1812–?/1881). An American engineer and Confederate officer.

Fors'kal, 1 fōrs'kal; 2 fōrs'kăl, Peter. (?/1732–?/1763) A Swedish naturalist and botanist.

for-slack'‡, v. I. t. To neglect through idleness; lose by inattention. II. i. To be remiss; idle.—for-slack'er‡, n. To lose by idleness or sloth. for-sleuth'‡; for-sloth'‡; for-slip'‡, vt. To permit to slip or escape.—for-slow'‡, v. I. t. To hinder; check; postpone. II. i. To be slow; loiter.

for-sook', 1 for-sŭk'; 2 fōr-sŏŏk', imp. & (poet.) pp. of FOR-SOOTH'‡, 1 for-sŭth'; 2 fōr-sōōth', adv. In truth; certainly: now used chiefly in irony. [< FOR, prep., + SOOTH.] —for-sooth'ly, a. To address deferentially with the word forsooth.—for-sooth'ness, n. One given to the use of the word forsooth; a ladies' man.

for-speak', vt. 1. [Scot. & Prov. Eng.] (1) To pronounce a spell on: bewitch. (2) To overpraise to one's harm. 2†. To forbid.—for-spend', vt. To weary utterly; tire out; exhaust. [Prussia.

Forst, 1 fōrst; 2 fōrst, n. A town in Brandenburg province.

for-stand', 1 for-stand'; 2 fōr-stănd', vt. 1. To stand against. 2. To comprehend.

forst'er‡, n. A forester.

For'ster, 1 fōr'stər; 2 fōr'ster, n. 1. George (–1792), an English traveler: Journey (overland) from Bengal to England. 2. Johann Georg Adam (?/1754–?/1794), a German naturalist: son of the following. 3. Johann Reinhold (?/1729–?/1798), a German clergyman; traveler; naturalist. 4. John (?/1812–?/1876), an English journalist and biographer. 5. William Edward (?/1818–?/1886), an English statesman; Chief Secretary for Ireland.

fors'ter-ite, 1 fōr'stər-īt; 2 fōr'ster-īt, n. Mineral. A vitreous, transparent, yellowish olivine (Mg$_2$SiO$_4$), member of the olivin group, crystallizing in the orthorhombic system. [< J. Forster, mineralogist.]

for-straught'‡, pp. & a. Distracted. [SWAT'‡; for-swat'‡; for-swat'‡, a. Covered with sweat. fore-swar'‡; fore-swear', 1 for-swār'; 2 fōr-swâr', v. [FOR-SWORE', FOR-SWORN'; FOR-SWEAR'ING.] I. t. To renounce upon oath; reject solemnly; renounce; abjure; to forswear gambling. 2. To deny under oath. II. i. To swear falsely; commit perjury: often reflexively. [< AS. forswerian. See FOR-1 and SWEAR.]—for-swear'er, n. 1. One who renounces on oath. 2. A perjurer.—for-sworn', pa. Perjured.—for-sworn'ness, n.

For-syte' Sa'ga, 1 fōr-sait' sā'gə; 2 fōr-sīt' sā'gə. A trilogy of novels by John Galsworthy, the author describing the frustrating and suppression of the instinct of possession. The first, "The Man of Property," was published in 1906; the second, "In Chancery," in 1920, and the third, "To Let," in 1922. They tell of the fortunes of a middle class family in the Victorian period.

For-syth', 1 for-saith'; 2 fōr-sīth', n. 1. Alexander John (?/1769–?/1843), a Scottish clergyman, chemist; inventor of the percussion-cap. 2. John (?/1780–?/1841), an American lawyer; minister to Spain; Secretary of State. 3. A county in N. W. corner of Georgia; 252 sq. m.; county-seat, Cumming. 4. A county in N. W. central North Carolina; 309 sq. m.; county-seat, Winston. 5. A city in Monroe county, Ga.

For-sy'thi-a, 1 for-sai'thi-ə or -sith'i-ə; 2 fōr-sī'thi-a or sīth'i-a, n. Bot. 1. A genus of slender shrubs of the olive family, natives of China and Japan, having in earliest spring a profusion of yellow flowers with 4-parted calyx, and bell-shaped, 4-cleft corolla. Two species, F. viridissima and F. suspensa, are widely cultivated. 2. [l-] A plant of this genus. [< Wm. FORSYTH, British botanist.]

fort‡, vt. & vi. To secure by or protect with a fort; fortify: also, to assign to or station in a fort to perform garrison duty.

fort, 1 fōrt; 2 fōrt, n. [< F. fort. A single enclosed work capable of independent defense, either a detached outwork of a fortress or a fortified enclosure containing guns for the defense of a town or the command of an entrance or passage; any fortification having a scarp and ditch, parapet, stockade, or the like, held by a garrison. 2. The strong part of a sword-blade; a rapier; forte. 3. [U. S. & Canada.] An Indian trading-post: originally always fortified. [F., < L. fortis, strong.] 4. Forte. Syn.: see FORTRESS.—fort royal, a great fortification.—fort'age (-ij), a work having several faces and alternate salient and reentrant angles.

A Round Fort.

fort, abbr. Fortification, fortified.

For'ta-le'za, 1 fōr'tə-lā'zə; 2 fōr'ta-lē'za, n. Same as CEARA.

fort'a-lice, } 1 fōrt'ə-lis; 2 fōrt'a-līç, n. An outwork of a fort'a-lis‡. } fortification; a small fort, as in Scotland in the Middle Ages.

[< OF. fortalesa, < LL. fortalitia, < L. fortis, strong.]

Fort At'kin-son. A city in Jefferson county, Wis.

Fort Bend. A county in S. E. Texas; 897 sq. m.; county-seat, Richmond.

Fort Brook. A town in Hillsboro county, Fla.

Fort Church'ill. A trading post on the W. shore of Hudson Bay, Keewatin district, Canada.

Fort Col'lins. The county-seat of Larimer county, Colo.: has a state agricultural college.

Fort'-de-France', 1 fōr'-də-frāns'; 2 fōr'-de-frâns', n. A fortified seaport town; capital of Martinique, French West Indies; has a naval arsenal and law school; birthplace of the Empress Josephine; devastated by a cyclone in August, 1891.

Fort De-pos'it. A town in Lowndes county, Ala.

Fort Dodge. A city; capital of Webster county, Ia.

forte‡, 1 fōrt; 2 fōrt, n. [< F. fort, strong.] 1. That for which one has a special faculty or in which he chiefly excels; a strong point; chief excellence; as, his forte is music. 2. The strongest part of a sword-blade, between the middle and the half-sword: opposed to foible. [< F. fort, strength < fort, strong, < L. fortis, strong.] fort'e.

for'te, 1 fōr'tē; 2 fōr'te, a. [It.] 1. Mus. A passage to be performed loudly. 2. A slide in a harmonium which may be opened to increase the sound.—for'te, a. & adv. Mus. Loud; often as a direction to the player.—for'te-mer'te, adv. Mus. Loudly; vigorously.—for'te-pi-a'no. 1. a. Loud, then soft, strongly accented. II. n. The pianoforte.

Fort Edward. A village and township in Washington county, N. Y.

Fort E'rie. A village in Welland county, Ontario province, Canada, taken by the American forces, June 3, 1814; evacuated Nov. 5.

for'tes-cue, 1 fōr'tes-kiū; 2 fōr'tes-cū, n. [Austral.] A scorpenoid fish (Pentarege marmorata) armed with numerous spines that inflict intensely painful stings.

Fortes-cue, Sir John (1394?–1476?). An English jurist.

Fort Fair'field. A village in Aroostook county, Me.

Forth, 1 fōrth; 2 fōrth, n. A river in Scotland; length, 170 m.: from ben Lomond to Firth of Forth.

forth, 1 fōrth; 2 fōrth, adv. 1. Forward, in place, time, or order; indefinitely onward; to the end; in advance; ahead; as, to stretch forth the hand; from this time forth. 2. Out, as from concealment, confinement, or an embryo state; into notice or view; also [Scot.], outdoors; as, the cattle bring forth young; to give forth fragrance; the buds burst forth.

Come forth into the light of things. Aeschylus be your teacher. WORDSWORTH Tables Turned st. 4.

For-tu'na, 1 fer-tiū'nə; 2 fŏr-tū'na, n. [L.] Rom. Myth. The goddess of chance or fortune, assimilated with the Greek Tyche. She was worshiped under various names, as Fors Fortuna, to whom a temple was raised by Servius Tullius on the banks of the Tiber; Bona or Fortuna Virgo, goddess of chastity and womanhood; Fortuna Primigenia, in reference to her being the first-born daughter of Jupiter; Nortia or Nurtia in Etruria. The goddess Fortuna figured more in the lives of the Romans than of the Greeks, and altars were dedicated to her under her various aspects. The most famous of these Roman Fortunas was the Fortuna Redux, "the Fortune that leads back," commemorating the return of Augustus in 19 B. C.

for'tu-nate, 1 fēr'chu-[or-tiu-]nɪt; 2 fôr'chu-[or -tū-]nat, a. 1. Happening by a favorable turn of fortune; bringing good from an unlooked-for or uncertain source; lucky. 2. Favored with or promising good fortune; marked by singular success; prosperous; as, a fortunate career.

The fortunate man is he who, born poor, or nobody, works gradually up to wealth and consideration, and having got them, dies before he finds they were not worth so much trouble.
CHAS. READE Christie Johnstone ch. 1, p. 5. [T. & F. 1864.]

[< F. fortuné, < L. fortunatus, pp. of fortuno, < fortuna; see FORTUNE.] for'tu-na-ble†.

Syn.: favored, happy, lucky, prospered, prosperous, successful. A man is successful in any case if he achieves or gains what he seeks; he is known as a successful man if he has achieved or gained worthy objects of endeavor; he is fortunate or lucky if advantages have come to him without or beyond his direct planning or achieving. Lucky is the more common and colloquial, fortunate the more elegant word; fortunate is more naturally applied to the graver matters, as we speak of the fortunate, rather than the lucky issue of a great battle; lucky more strongly emphasizes the element of chance, as when we speak of a lucky hit, a lucky guess, or of one as "born under a lucky star." Favored is used in a religious sense, implying that one is the object of divine favor. Happy, in this connection, signifies possessed of the means of happiness. One is said to be happy or prosperous whether his prosperity be the result of fortune or of achievement; prospered rather denotes the action of a superintending Providence. See AUSPICIOUS.— Ant.: broken, crushed, fallen, ill-starred, miserable, unfortunate, unhappy, woful, wretched.— for'tu-nate†, n. A person who is fortunate; especially, in astrology, a propitious sign or planet.— for'tu-nate-ly, adv.— for'tu-nate-ness, n.

for'ward, n. 1. A player, as in football, basketball, hockey, polo, etc., who plays the aggressive in advance of other members of the team to which he belongs. Called, according to the position he occupies, right forward or left f. Compare BACK, n. 2. Naut. The fore part of a ship. 3†. In wrestling, a trick throw by which an opponent is thrown on his face.

for'ward, for'wards, 1 fēr'wərd, -wərdz; 2 fôr'ward, -wards, adv. Toward the front or some advanced position in place or time; ahead; onward: opposed to backward: often used as an interjection or command with an imperative understood; as, forward, my men!

Conjecturing forward, though the Present lay Like Eden round us. E. C. STEDMAN The Freshet st. 5.

The original and proper distinction was that forward referred to motion, forwards to position or manner.

[< AS. foreweard, < fore, before, + -weard, -WARD.] — to go forward [Scot.], to take holy communion.— for'wardsome, a. [Scot. & Prov. Eng.] Of an impertinent, pushing nature; cheeky. for'rit-some‡.

for'ward-er, 1 fēr'wərd-ər; 2 fôr'ward-er, n. 1. Com. A person, firm, or corporation whose business it is to receive goods for transportation and send them to their destination; a forwarding merchant or agent.

Forwarding merchants, or forwarders, are a class of business men who store and forward goods by other agencies, they receiving a commission from the owner for their trouble in storing, and in selecting such carrying agencies.
E. WHARTON Law of Negligence p. 552. [K. & BRO. 1878.]

2. One who carries forward or promotes anything, as a reform. 3. Bookbinding. One who forwards a book. See FORWARD, v., 4.

for'ward-ing, 1 fēr'wərd-ɪŋ; 2 fôr'ward-ing, n. 1. The act of promoting or hastening; the sending forward of goods, etc. 2. [U. S.] Bookbinding. The processes of trimming and covering a book and preparing it for the finisher.

for-waste'†, vt. To lay waste.

for'we†, n. Same as FURROW.

for-wear'†, vt. To use up; exhaust.— for-worn', pp.

for-wea'ry, vt. [Archaic.] To tire out.— for-wea'ried†, pp.

for-weep'†, v. I. t. To tire out with weeping. II. i. To bleed, as a vine.

for-we'rie†, a. Very weary. CHAUCER R. R. l. 3,336.

for-why'†, conj. Because.

for-wrap'†, vt. To wrap up.

for'za, 1 fēr'dzɑ; 2 fôr'dzä, n. [It.] Mus. Emphasis; force: in the phrase con forza, a direction to the player.— for-zan'do, a. Mus. Sudden and strong accent, indicated by the sign > or by the abbreviation sfz., sf., or fz. for-za'to‡; sfor-zan'do‡.— for-za're, v. Mus. To strengthen.

Fos'broke, 1 foz'bruk; 2 fŏs'brok, Thomas Dudley (5/27 1770–1/1 1842). An English clergyman and antiquary.

Fos-ca'ri, 1 fos-kā'rī; 2 fŏs-cä'rī, Francesco (1372?–10/31 1457). A doge of Venice; made three wars with Milan. See TWO FOSCARI.

Fos"ca-ri'ni, 1 fos"kɑ-rī'nɪ; 2 fŏs"cä-rī'nī, Marco (1/30 1696–3/31 1763). A doge of Venice; historian.

Fos'co-lo, 1 fos'ko-lō; 2 fŏs'co-lō, Ugo (1/26 1778–10/10 1827). An Italian poet; dramatist; essayist.

Fo'site, n. See FORSETE.

foss[1], 1 fos; 2 fŏs, n. 1. Fort. A ditch or moat, usually full of water, between the scarp and the counterscarp of a fortification, below the rampart and extending around the place that is to be defended. See FORTIFICATION. 2. An artificial or enlarged watercourse; canal; ditch. 3. Anat. A fossa. [< F. fosse, < L. fossa, < fodio, dig.] fosse‡.— foss'age†, n. The obligation on the part of the inhabitants of a fortified town to clean out the foss; also, a tax paid in lieu of such service.— foss'way", n. One of the great roads built by the Romans in England with a ditch or foss on each side. fosse'way"‡.

foss[2], n. [Prov. Eng.] A waterfall. forse‡.

Foss, 1 fos; 2 fŏs, Sam Walter (6/10 1858–2/26 1911). A poet and lecturer; Back Country Poems.

fos'sa[1], 1 fos'ə; 2 fŏs'a, n. [FOS'SÆ, 1 -ī, 2 -ē, pl.] Anat. A shallow depression, pit, or cavity. [L., < fossus, pp. of fodio, dig.] — amygdaloid fossa, the depression between the anterior and posterior pillars of the fauces where the tonsil is situated, now called the sinus tonsillaris.— clavicular fossæ, depressions at the lower part of the neck above the clavicle. The greater (fossa supraclavicularis major) is behind the insertion of the sternomastoid muscle; the lesser (fossa supraclavicularis minor) is between the sternal and the clavicular insertions of that muscle.—crotaphite f., the temporal fossa, especially in a bird's skull. — cubital f., a hollow on the surface of the arm in front of the elbow. antecubital f.‡.— epigastric f., the pit of the stomach, the depression at the lower end of the sternum.— f. cerebelli, the posterior cranial fossa.— f. intercondyloidea, same as INTERCONDYLOID FOSSA.— f. navicularis. 1. The dilated part of the penile urethra near its distal end. 2. A depression at the lower posterior part of the vestibule in the female genitals.— fossæ of the skull or cranium (Anat.), the cranial fossæ, three large depressions, anterior, middle, and posterior, on the interior or upper surface of the base of the skull in which rest the frontal and temporal lobes of the cerebrum, and the cerebellum.— f. of the antihelix (Anat.), the fossa triangularis, a shallow hollow of the external ear, enclosed between two ridges that fork from the upper end of the antihelix.— f. ovalis (Anat.), a depression, a vestige of the fetal foramen ovale, on the interauricular septum of the right auricle of the heart.— Harderian f., a depression on the nasal side of the orbit occupied by the Harderian gland of the eye in animals having a nictitating membrane.—hypotrochanteric f., a fossa at the upper end of the femur below the trochanter, sometimes seen in prehistoric man and the anthropoid apes.—incisive f. (Anat.), a depression on the front part of the upper maxilla above the incisor teeth. incisor f., -interdondyloid f. I. A depression between the two condyles at the lower end of the femur. 2. Either of two depressions (anterior and posterior) between the condyles of the tibia. intercondylar f., -mesencephalic f., in birds, the hollow at the base of the cranium occupied by the medulla.—olfactory f., the cavity inside the cranium in which the olfactory lobes are situated.—patellar f., the hyaloid fossa.—pituitary f., a depression below the olivary process of the sphenoid bone, lodging the pituitary body.—quadratojugal f., the space contained within the quadratojugal of a bird's skull, the palatine, and the anterior end of the mandila.—subscapular f., a fossa or cavity on the internal surface of the scapula.—subtrochanteric f., the hollow at the caudal aspect of the anterior end of the humerus, in birds: the pneumatic foramina there present debouch into it.—Sylvian f., a depressed area on the lateral surface of the cerebrum at an early stage that becomes gradually concealed by the growth of the brain. It contains the insula, and the approximation of the sides of the mantle over it forms the fissure of Sylvius. fossa cerebri lateralis.—tonsillar f., same as AMYGDALOID FOSSA.—urachal f., a hollow which separates the urachus from the hypogastric artery in the interior lining of the abdomen, now called the supravesical fossa.

fos'sak, 1 fos'ak; 2 fŏs'ăk, n. A variety of the common European trout (Salmo fario) found in tidal estuaries.

Fos-sa'no, 1 fos-sē'no; 2 fŏs-sē'no, n. A town in Cuneo province, Piedmont, Italy.

fos'sar, 1 fos'er; 2 fŏs'ar, n. A univalve of the genus Fossarus.

Fos-sa'ri-an, 1 fo-sē'ri-on; 2 fŏ-sē'ri-an, n. 1. Ch. Hist. One of a sect of eremites (15th century) who celebrated their rites in ditches or caves. 2. [l.c.] In the early church, a cleric of the humblest class, whose occupation was grave-digging. [< LL. Fossarii, < L. fossa; see FOSS-.]

fos-sar'i-de, 1 fo-sar'i-dē; 2 fŏ-sär'i-dē, n. pl. Conch. A family of taenioglossate gastropods having a proboscidiform head, the median teeth cuspidate, the lateral wide and denticulate, the marginal minute, and the shell turriculate.

fos-sette', 1 fo-set'; 2 fŏ-sĕt', n. [F.] 1. A dimple or small depression, as in the crown of a tooth. 2. Pathol. An ulcer on the cornea.

fos'sick, 1 fos'ik; 2 fŏs'ĭk, vi. 1. [Austral.] (1) Mining. To dig out crevices with knife and pick; also, to work out the pillars of abandoned claims, or work over wasteheaps in hope of finding gold. (2) Hence, to rummage about or seek for any kind of profit; as, to fossick for clients. 2. [Prov. Eng.] To be troublesome.—fos'sicker, n. A miner who fossicks.

fos'sil, 1 fos'il; 2 fŏs'ĭl, a. and n. [F. fossile, < L. fossilis, of the nature of a fossil; derived from fossils; fossiliferous; also, petrified; as, fossil iron ore.

Fossil evidence furnishes the chief means of comparing the relative chronological value of the rocks of each . . .

ARCH. GEIKIE Text-Book Geology p. 637. [IMACM. 1885.]

—fossil copal, same as COPALIN.—f. cork, f. flax, f. paper, varieties of asbestos.—f. farts, burgundy pitch, meat.—f. ivory, ivory obtained from the frozen remains of prehistoric mammoths in northern Siberia.—f. oil, petroleum.—f. ore (Mining), red hematite-bearing fossils.—f. water, water found in strata of rock, and believed to have been there before the petrification of the sediments.

fos'sil, n. 1. Any organic body so situated in the earth, as by being buried in solid rock or in earthy deposits, as to be capable of indefinite preservation; especially, such a body of prehistoric times.

Fossils may consist of hard substances, as bones or teeth preserved nearly in their original state, or of perishable substances fossilized. In general, fossilization takes place by the decomposition of that part of the organic structure which is least permanent and its replacement with some mineral matter. New products are usually formed, either by chemical combination in the course of the decomposition, or by entire substitution and alteration of texture, as when a shell, wood, etc., is changed into a siliceous fossil by subjecting the organism to the action of water containing silica in solution. The mineral matter is frequently calcium carbonate, sometimes iron oxid or pyrite, and rarely fluorite, barite, apatite. The mineral matter very slowly fills the cells of the organic structure, replacing each particle as it decomposes and passes away.

2. Less generally, one of ville, Utah, including the present certain inorganic objects Great Salt Lake and Lake Utah.
or substances, usually buried by natural agencies in the earth's crust, which in extinct or mineralized forms preserve in themselves records of the natural activities or phenomena of ancient geological ages, as solidified ripple-marks; also, buried records of human activities, even within historic times.

The flowing mud . . . has made fossils of cities, of which Herculaneum and Pompeii are examples.

DANA Characteristics of Volcanoes p. 19. [n. w. & co. 1890.]

The 'Potsdam sandstone' . . . was long regarded as the oldest fossiliferous rock in America.

WINCHELL Sketches of Creation p. 77. [n. 1870.]

—fos-sil'i-fy, 1 fos'il-ī; 2 fŏs'ĭl-ī, t. To fossilize. fos'sil-ize. To become a fossil.—fos-sil'i-fi-ca'tion, n.—fos'sil-ism, n. 1. Fossilship. 2. Paleontology.—fos'sil-ist, n. A paleontologist. fos-sil'o-gist; fos'sil-ol'o-gist; fos-sil'l-ty, n. The state of being fossil; the nature of a fossil.—fos'sil-o-log'ical, a. Pertaining to fossilology.—fos'sil-ol'o-gy, n. Paleontology.—fos'sil-o-gy.

fos'sil-ize, 1 fos'il-gīz; 2 fŏs'ĭl-īz, v. [-IZED; -IZ'ING.] I. t. 1. To convert into a fossil; petrify (an organic substance).

Fossilized remains, indicative of torrid heats, are found underlying the upper strata of ore and earth lands.

AMELIA B. EDWARDS Barbara's History p. 178. [n. 1864.]

Fos'sil Lake. A pass in Nevada: 8,023 ft. high.

fos'sor, 1 fos'er; 2 fŏs'or, n. [FOS-SO'RES, 1 fo-sō'rēz; 2 fŏ-sō'rēz, pl.] [L.] 1. A grave-digger; fossarian; sexton. 2. One of the Fossores: a digger-wasp.

Fosso'res, 1 fo-sō'rēz; 2 fŏ-sō'rēz, n. pl. Entom. A tribe or superfamily of hymenopterous insects having the abdominal petiole simple and the hind tarsi subcylindrical, as in wasps, &c. [L., pl. of fossor, digger, < fodio, dig.] Fos-so'ri-al.

fos-so'ri-al, 1 fo-sō'ri-ol; 2 fŏ-sō'ri-al, a. 1. Digging; burrowing. 2. Zoöl. Specially adapted for digging in the earth, as the legs of certain insects. 3. Of or pertaining to the Fossores; as, fossorial hymenopter. [< L. fossorius, < fossor (see FOSSORES.)] fos-so'ri-ous.

fos-so'rymph, n. A burying animal.

fos'su-la, 1 fos'yu-lə; 2 fŏs'yu-la, n. [-LÆ, 1 -lē; 2 -lē, pl.] [L.] A little fossa. fos'sulet.—fos'su-late, a. Having shallow grooves or furrows.—fos'sule, n. Entom. An elongated shallow groove.

fos'ter, 1 fos'ter; 2 fŏs'ter, a. I. t. 1. To provide with nourishment; feed; hence, to rear; bring up.

To foster another's child was in Rome regarded as an acknowledgment of inferiority.

H. H. BOYESEN Norway ch. 5, p. 73. [n. d. & r. 1886.]

2. To promote the growth of; forward; as, plants fostered by the sun. 3. To give aid or encouragement to; sustain, promote, or cherish; as, to foster genius.

II†. t. To feed; nourish; or cherish. [< AS. fōstrian, < fōstor, nourishment; cp. FOOD.] Syn: see AID, CHERISH.—fos'ter-babe', n. A foster-child in infancy.—f.-brother, n. A male child nursed at the same breast or brought up in the same family with another, not his own brother or sister.

Foster-brothers were those who in their youth had been brought up together — the sense of the relation and tie fostered by them.

DU CHAILLU Viking Age vol. ii, p. 61. [n. 1889.]

—f.-child, n. A child reared by one who is not its parent; a foster-son, or -daughter. 2. A woman who rears a child that is not her offspring.—f.-daughter, n. A female foster-child.—f.-earth, n. Earth in which a plant that is not indigenous to the soil is reared.—f.-father, n. One who acts as a father toward one not his offspring.—f.-land, n. 1. One's adopted land. 2†. Land set apart for the maintenance of a person or monastic body; a glebe.—f.-lamb, n. Pelt for bringing up a foster-child; also, perhaps, a wife's jointure.—f.-mother, n. One who acts as a mother toward one not her offspring.—f.-nurse, n. A nurse-child.—f.-parent, n. One who acts as parent, tho not so in fact.—f.-sister, n. One reared as a sister, tho not so in fact. See FOSTER-BROTHER.—f.-son, n. A male foster-child.—f.-son(-in)-law, n. = foster-age, n. 1. The care of a foster-child; the act or custom of fostering; adoption. 2. The state or condition of a foster-child.

This was Fosterage, the giving and taking of children for nurture. H. S. MAINE Early Hist. Institutions p. 241. [c. m. 1875.]

—fos'ter-er, n. 1. One who nourishes, cherishes, or promotes; as, a fosterer of sedition. 2. [Ir.] A foster-brother.—fos'ter-ess, fos'tress, n.—fos'ter-hood, n. The state of fostering or of being fostered; relationship constituted by fostering.—fos'ter-ship; —fos'ter-ling, n. 1. Fosterage. 2. Nourishment; food. fos'tring†.—fos'ter-ling-ly, adv.—fos'ter-ling, n. A foster-child.

fos'ter-ite, n. 1. Forsterite. 2. One who fosters.

fos'ter‡, n. A forester.—fos'ter-ship†, n.

Fos'ter, 1. Frank P. (1/21841–2/11911), an American physician; editor of New York Medical Journal and of Illustrated Encycl. Medical Dict. 2. Henry (1/21796–2/11831), an English erotic and antarctic explorer; drowned. 3. James (1/21697–1/21753), an English Baptist divine. 4. John (1/21770–1/21843), an English writer; born in Canada. 5. John (1780?–3/21846), an English architect. 6. John Gray (1/21818–1874), a United States general and Military Engineer; present at defense of Fort Sumter, April, 1861. 7. John Watson (2/21838–11/21917), an American general; Secretary of State, 1892–1893. 8. Jan Wills (1/21815–1/21873), an American song-writer. 9. Lafayette Sabine (1/21806–9/21880), a United States senator. 10. Sir Michael, K. C. B. (1/21836–1/21907), an English physiologist and author; professor of physiology in Trinity College, Cambridge. 11. Myles Birket (2/21825–1/21899), an English aquarellist and landscape artist; illustrated Longfellow's poems and American and English books. 12. Stephen Collins (7/21826–1/21864), an American song-writer; Old Kentucky Home, Old Folks at Home, and many other popular songs. 13. A county in central North Dakota; 641 sq. m.; county-seat, Carrington. 14. A town, capital of Providence county, R. I. S. S.

fos'tic, 1 fos'tik; 2 fŏs'tĭk, n. A powder composed of steatite and sulfate of copper, for destroying fungi: trade name.

fos'took, 1 fos'tuk; 2 fŏs'tŭk, n. [Chin.] A middleman; commission agent.

Fos-to'ri-a, 1 fos-tō'ri-ə; 2 fŏs-tō'ri-a, n. 1. A village in Warren county, Miss. 2. A city in Seneca county, O. F. O. T., or f. o. t., abbr. Free on train.

fotch, 1 foch; 2 fŏch, a. [Dial., U. S.] To bring; fetch.

fote†. A foot.

foth'er, 1 foth'er; 2 fŏth'er, vt. To stop (a leak in the hull of a ship) by drawing a sail or other canvas or tarpaulin over it from the outside, so that the pressure of the water will hold it against the sides of the aperture; also, to prepare (a mat or cloth) for this purpose. [< Ice. fōðra, < fōðr, lining.] foth'ering.

foth'er, n. 1. An old unit of weight. See WEIGHT. 2. A pig of lead used for ship's ballast. 3†. A load or cart-load. [< AS. fōther, load.] fod'der†; foth'ur.

Foth'er-gill, 1 foth'er-gil; 2 fŏth'er-gĭl, John (?/21712–1780). An English physician and medical writer.—Fothergill's disease, tic douloureux.—Fothergill's sore throat, same as SCARLATINA ANGINOSA.

Foth'er-gil'la, 1 foth'ar-gil'ə; 2 fŏth'er-gĭl'a, n. Bot. A genus of low branching shrubs native in the southern Allegheny states and belonging to the family Hamamelideæ. The flowers are perfect, covered with scale-like bracts. There are only two species, F. gardeni and F. major, both cultivated. [< John Fothergill.] Foth'er-in-gay, the, 1 foth'ar-in-gā; 2 fŏth'er-in-gā. In Thackeray's Pendennis, the stage-name of Emily or Millie Costigan.

Foth'er-in-gay Cas'tle. A castle in Northamptonshire, England, the prison and place of execution of Mary Queen of Scots; razed by James I.

fou, n. A measure of lead weighing 70 pounds. S. S.

fou'-a-graf, pp. Photographed. S. S.

fou, 1 fū; 2 fu, a. [Scot.] Full; drunk.

foud, 1, 2 fud, n. [Scot.] A bushel.

fou'ę, n. [Grenada W. I.] A booby (Sula sula).

fou'age', 1 fū'ij; 2 fu'ăzh', n. Same as FEUAGE.

Fou'eade', 1 fu'ād; 2 fu'ĭād', n. Same as FOUGADE.

Fou'eault', 1 fū'ō; 2 fu'ō', Jean Bernard Léon (9/21819–1/21868). A French physicist; measured the velocity of light by means of a revolving mirror; devised the pendulum that bears his name; inventor of the GYROSCOPE.

Fou'ché', 1 fū'shē'; 2 fu'chĕ', Joseph (1/21763–12/21820). Duke of Otranto, a French administrator who joined in suppressing Robespierre; twice minister of police, and finally exiled.

Four'ier-ism, 1 fūr'i-er-izm; 2 fur'i-er-izm, n. The communistic system advocated by F. M. C. Fourier, based upon his peculiar social scheme; phalansterianism.

The central idea was that a scheme of life in which free play was given to all the feelings and passions would necessarily result in social concord, through the spontaneous formation of social groups composed of sympathetic individuals. Fourier proposed to associate people into phalanges, each one a body of about 1,800 persons, divided by affinities into groups of 24 to 32, composed of persons attracted to each other by one of the four affective passions — friendship, love, ambition, and familism. Each of these groups was to occupy a phalanstery, a beautiful and commodious structure in the center of a highly cultivated and practically self-supporting farm of one league square. From the results of the labor of all each member was to have his share, and the residue was to be divided into 12 shares, 5 of which went to labor, 4 to capital, and 3 to talent. The system was tried without success in France and by the Brook Farm community in the United States.

Sir William (1/14 1812–†1893), an English lawyer and statesman; premier of New Zealand.

Fox'boro, 1 fŏks'bur-o; 2 fŏks'bŏr-o, n. A town in Norfolk county, Mass.

Fox'croft, 1 fŏks'krŏft; 2 fŏks'krôft, n. A town in Piscataquis county, Me.

Fox'e, 1 fŏks; 2 fŏks, n. 1. John (1516–†1/21 1587), an English divine, reformer, and historian; Book of Martyrs. 2. Richard (1448?–†1/28 1523), an English prelate and diplomat; founder of Corpus Christi College, Oxford.

foxed, 1 fŏkst; 2 fŏksd, p. a. Discolored by decay: applied to timber, paper, etc. 3. Having light-brown stains or spots: used with reference to chemical stains on the paper of books, prints, etc. 3. Repaired or ornamented with a foxing, as the upper-leather of a shoe.

fox'er-y†, n. Foxlike character or conduct. fox'er-let.

Fox'es, 1 fŏks'ez; 2 fŏks'ĕz, n. pl. An Algonkin tribe of North-American Indians, formerly inhabiting the neighborhood of Green Bay, Wisconsin, and long ago combined with the Sauks; Outagamies. See AMERICAN.

fox'fire†, 1 fŏks'fair'; 2 fŏks'fīr', n. The phosphorescent light emitted by fungi or rotten wood.

fox'glove", 1 fŏks'gluv"; 2 fŏks'glŏv", n. 1. Any plant of the genus Digitalis, especially the English D. purpurea, having flowers in long one-sided racemes and leaves of medicinal value. 2. Any one of various kindred species, as of Gerardia; as, the yellow or the downy foxglove (G. flava and G. quercifolia). 3. [cf. AS. foxes glōfa] Spec., pron. as if AS. fox, fox; glōfa, glove.]—false foxglove, see DASYSTOMA.—lousewort f. (Pedicularis canadensis), the American lousewort or wood-betony.

a, flower laid open, showing didynamous stamens.

fox'grape", 1 fŏks'grēp"; 2 fŏks'grāp', n. Any one of several species of American grapes; especially, the northern fox-grape (Vitis labrusca), dark-purple or amber in color, with a tough, musky pulp, the original of the Isabella, Catawba, Concord, and other varieties; also, in the southern United States, V. rotundifolia, from which has been developed the southern scuppernong grape or southern fox-grape.

fox'hound", 1 fŏks'hound"; 2 fŏks'-hound", n. One of a breed of dogs trained for fox-hunting, noted for keenness and power of scent. See plate of DOGS.

Their dash and vigour in the chase is much greater than that of the bloodhound, foxhounds casting forwards when they have lost the trail. Encyc. Brit., 11th ed., vol. xiv. p. 816.

Fox'i-an, 1 fŏks'i-an; 2 fŏks'ī-an, n. A follower of George Fox; a Friend.

Those poor Foxians say that he (Christ) did not come again to them. GEORGE FOX AND JOHN BUNYEAN A New England Firebrand Quenched p. 127. [1678.]

fox'i-ness‡, 1 fŏks'i-nes; 2 fŏks'ī-nĕs, n. The condition or quality of being foxy. 2. Slyness; cunning; craft. (2) Muskiness of taste and smell, as in fox-grapes.

fox'i-ness‡, n. 1. The state or quality of being foxed or decayed, as timber, or discolored, as books. 2. The state or quality of possessing a sour, fermented taste: said of beer or wine.

fox'ing, 1 fŏks'ing; 2 fŏks'ing, n. A piece of leather applied over the upper-leather of a shoe or boot, along the edge next to the sole, either for repair or for ornament.

Fox'ite, 1 fŏks'īt; 2 fŏks'īt, n. Eng. Hist. A follower of Charles James Fox.

Fox river. 1. A river in N. E. Wisconsin; 250 m. long to Lake Michigan. 2. A river in S. E. Wisconsin and N. E.

REPRESENTATIVE TYPES OF FOWLS.

Illinois; 220 m. long to the Illinois river. Both take their names from the Fox Indians.

fox'ship, n. The characteristics of a fox; cunning.

fox'-squir"rel, 1 fołks'-skĭw'ĭr-əl; 2 fŏks'-skĭw'ĭr-əl, n. A large arboreal squirrel of the eastern and southern parts of the United States, prevailingly reddish in color, and having a large and bushy tail. The typical western species (Sciurus hudsonicanus), now nearly extinct, varies from rusty gray to orange and sometimes black, with white under parts; the southern species (S. niger) varies from pale gray to jet-black, the top of the head being always black, and the ears and nose white.

fox'tail, 1 fołks'tēl; 2 fŏks'tīl, n. 1. Metal. The last cinder obtained in the Welsh process of refining iron in a charcoal forge. 2. Any one of various species of grass bearing a dense cylindrical spike of flowers suggestive of a fox's tail; especially, in the United States, various species of Alopecurus and Chaetochloa; as, meadow-foxtail (A. pratensis); floating foxtail or water-foxtail (A. geniculatus); bristly foxtail (C. glauca). Compare GRASS. foxtail-grass, 3. [Prov. Eng.] A club-moss (Lycopodium clavatum). [C.] 4. See FOX-EARL under FOX.—fox'tail-grass, n. Same as FOXTAIL 2.—fox'wedge, n. See FOX-WEDGE.

fox'ter"ri-er, 1 fołks'tər-ĭ-ər; 2 fŏks'tẽr-ĭ-ẽr, n. One of a breed of short-coated mainly white terriers, used to drive foxes from their earths: now kept largely as pets. See plate of DOGS.

Fox'-type", 1 fołks'-tīp"; 2 fŏks'-tīp", n. The washout relation process of photoengraving developed by H. Fox Talbot, or a picture produced by this process [< H. Fox Talbot + -TYPE.]

fox'wood", 1 fołks'wụd"; 2 fŏks'wo͝od", n. Decayed or foxed wood; specifically, that which emits a phosphorescent light.

fox'y, 1 fołks'ĭ; 2 fŏks'ĭ, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or like a fox; tricky; crafty; in a better sense, alert; knowing.

Dunstan . . . was too foxy to be caught napping.
H. BURNHAM'S Zigzag Journeys p. 55. [L. & L.]

2. Of the color of a red fox; reddish-brown; rufous.

BAYARD TAYLOR'S Garden-Mint st. 14.

3. Having the odor of a fox; strong-smelling; rank.

4. Having a musty taste or smell, like a fox-grape.

fox'y, a. 1. Soured; impaired; fermented, as wine. 2. Discolored or stained; foxed, as a badly dyed fabric.

foy‡, n. Faith; fealty.—foy'al†, a. Feal.

foy‡, n. A feast given before or after going on a journey.

Foy, 1 fwē; 2 fwā, Maximilien Sébastien (?/ā1775–11/ā2 1825). A French general; at Austerlitz, in the Peninsular war, and at Waterloo.

foy'a-lite, 1 foi'ə-līt; 2 fŏy'ə-līt, n. Petrol. 1. A variety of nephelite syenite characterized by minor amounts of augite or hornblende. (Shim, 1893.) 2. Nephelite syenite. 3. Any variety of nephelite syenite having a trachytic texture, as contrasted with dittroite, having a granular texture. [< Monte Foya, Portugal.]

foy'er, 1 fwȯ'ər, fȯi'ər; 2 fwā'γę or fȯγ'ẽr, n. [F.] 1. A public room, lobby, or meeting-place in a theater or opera-house, usually near the auditorium. 2. The basin or depression containing the molten metal in a furnace.

foyle†, v. & n. Same as FOIL.

foynet, vt. To push; thrust.

foy'son†, n. Same as FOISON, n. foyst†.

foy'son†, n. Foison; plenty.

foze, 1 fōz; 2 fōz, n. [Scot.] To acquire mold; lose flavor.

fo'zy, 1 fō'zi; 2 fō'zy, a. [Scot.] Lacking substance; spongy; without pith or stamina. fo'zier.—fo'zi-ness, n.

fra, 1 frā; 2 frā, adv. & prep. [Scot.] From; fro.

Fraa-nag'reer", 1 frē'ŋŋ-ər'rēr"; 2 frē'ŋŋ-nāŋ'ẽr-ẽrę", n. Norse Myth. The cascade, or force, into which Loki leaped, disguised as a salmon, and where the gods searched for him with a net and numbers.

frab, 1 frab; 2 frāb, vt. [Prov. Eng.] To harass; nag; plague.—frab'bit, a. Feevish.

frab'jous, 1 frab'jŭs; 2 frāb'jŏs, a. A nonsense word with adjectival force, denoting fair and joyous; a portmanteau word formed by C. L. Dodgson (Lewis Carroll) and used by him in Through the Looking-glass. See quotation under NONSENSE WORD.—frab-jous'ness, n.

fra'cas, 1 frē'kəs or (F.) frā'kȧ; 2 frā'cəs or (F.) frā'cȧ (XIII), n. 1. A general fight; noisy quarrel; brawl; row.

In the fracas our brave commander got his remaining well eye badly damaged.

2. Noisy disturbance; uproar; tumult.

Without the degree of fracas incidental to such occasions.

frache, 1 frēsh; 2 frēch, n. Ceramography. An iron pan for holding glassware in an annealing-oven. [Perhaps < F. fraîche, f. of frais, fresh, < OHG. frisc, fresh.]

frach'ti†, n. Overpayment; interest; in botany, pappus.

frack, 1 frak; 2 frāk, a. [Prov. Eng.] a. t. To overflood. II. t. To throng or swarm. H. Dict.

frack, a. [Scot.] 1. Strong, firm, or vigorous, physically or mentally. 2. Characterized by readiness; forward; audacious.

frac'ta-ble, 1 frak'tə-bl; 2 frāc'tə-bl, n. Arch. A gable-head.—frac'ta-bly, adv. In the general outline of the gable, as by steps or crenelles. [< L. fractus; see FRACTION.]—frac'ta-ling†.

fract'ed, 1 frak'təd; 2 frāc'tẽd, a. 1. Her. Broken off or divided, as a fesse or chevron. Compare FAILLIS. 2†. Broken. [< L. fractus; see FRACTION.]

frac'tile, 1 frak'til; 2 frāc'til, a. Geol. Pertaining to cleavage; of rock or breakage, as in stone. [< L. fractus; see FRACTION.]

frac'tion, 1 frak'shən; 2 frāc'shən, vt. To fractionate; separate into fractions.

frac'tion, n. 1. A disconnected part or separated portion; a fragment.

All London-born men . . . seem to me narrow bulls, . . . rather fractions of a man.
CARLYLE & SCOTT'S Thomas Carlyle vol. ii. p. 361. [L. 1883.]

2. Math. (1) Arith. (a) A quantity less than a unit. (b) A quantity expressed as the sum of any number of aliquot parts of a unit.

The shade of the moon, the moment of an eclipse, can be determined to the fraction of a second.
EMERSON'S Conduct of Life, Worship p. 172. [N. & co. 1883.]

(2) Alg. A quotient of one algebraic quantity divided by another, expressed in the form of a vulgar fraction.

Fractions are classified as: (a) common or vulgar, expressed by two numbers, a denominator, indicating a number of equal parts into which the unit is to be divided, and a numerator, indicating the number of those parts to be taken. These may be divided either into (a) proper fractions, in which the numerator is less than the denominator, and (b) improper fractions, in which it exceeds the denominator, or into (a) simple fractions, in which the numerator and denominator are whole numbers, and (b) compound fractions, fractions of fractions, or (c) complex fractions, in which either numerator or denominator is a fraction, including continued fractions (see CONTINUED). (b) decimal, expressed by writing a number of tenths, hundredths, etc., the denominators being understood. See DECIMAL.

(3) Symbol. Logic. A fractional representation of the relation of logical classes to each other, expressed in the algebraic manner. 3. [Rare.] The act of breaking, or the condition of being broken, as by force; a fracture.

Their fraction is more our wish than their faction.
SHAKESPEARE'S Julius and Cleopatra act ii. sc. 3.

4. Eccl. The rite of breaking the eucharistic bread. 5. Chem. The distillates obtained by fractionating. [F., < L. fractio(n-) < fractus, pp. of frango, break.] Syn.: see PART.

frac'tion, vt. [< F. fractionner, < fraction, n.] To separate the proportion of dry steam in the whole in a quantity of wet steam; thus, if the dryness fraction be .79, there is 21 per cent. of free moisture present in it.—axial fraction, a fraction considered as expressing the relative depth in the direction of assemblages having a known order. Thus $^4/_5$ is ordinal, in that it comes between $^1/_5$ and $^2/_5$ in a series of which all three are equal parts; partial fraction, the fractions whose sum may be reduced to the original fraction.—vanishing fr., a fraction with a variable numerator and denominator which become zero at the same instant.

frac'tion-al, 1 frak'shən-əl; 2 frāc'shon-al, a. 1. Pertaining to or constituting a fraction; especially, being one or more of the equal or aliquot parts of a unit; hence, broken; small; as, fractional numbers; fractional currency. 2. Pertaining to fractionation; as, fractional distillation. 3. Stock Exchange. Having reference to or being a number less than the unit of regular transactions, which for shares is 100 and for bushels of grain 5,000; as, fractional quotations.—crystallization, fr., separation of a substance from other bodies by repeated crystallization from successive solutions.—f. distillation, fractionation.—f. precipitation (Chem.), fractionation by precipitation.—frac'tion-al-ly, adv.

frac'tion-al, n. Gram. An ordinal numeral (except first and second) used to denote a part of a whole taken, as a third, a hundredth. See ORDINAL.

In this sense they [ordinals] are called fractionals. The fractional corresponding to two is half instead of second; and instead of fourth, quarter is commonly used.
W. D. WHITNEY Essentials of Eng. Grammar p. 94. [c. & co. 1877.]

frac'tion-a-ry, 1 frak'shən-ĕ-rı; 2 frāc'shon-a-ry, a. 1. Fractional. 2. Schismatic; heretical. 3. Relating to or worked by fractionation.

frac'tion-ate, 1 frak'shən-ēt; 2 frāc'shon-āt, vt. [-AT'ED; -AT'ING.] Chem. To separate (a mixture, as a liquid by distillation) into fractions having more or less fixed properties but not necessarily definite compounds: applied also to mixtures of rare earths.

frac'tion-a-tion, 1 frak'shən-ē'shən; 2 frāc'shon-a'shon, n. Chem. The act of separating by successive processes the apparent components of a mixed body; fractional distillation.

frac'tion-a"tor, 1 frak'shən-ē"tər or -tọr; 2 frāc'shon-ā"tọr, n. Chem. An apparatus for fractionation by distillation.

frac'tion-ize, 1 frak'shən-īz; 2 frāc'shon-īz, vt. & vi. [-IZED; -IZ'ING.] To divide into fractions.

frac'tion-let, n. [Rare.] A little fraction.

frac'tious, 1 frak'shəs; 2 frāc'shŭs, a. Apt or disposed to be fractious; peevish; cross; violently out of humor; unruly; as, a fractious steed. [< Prov. Eng. fratch, scold.] Syn.: see FRETFUL.—frac'tious-ly, adv.—frac'tious-ness, n.

frac'to-, 1 frak'tō-; 2 frāc'tō-. From Latin fractus, broken; a combining form used in mineralogical nomenclature.—frac'to-cu"mu-lus, n. Ragged, detached fragments of cumulus cloud.—frac'to-stim"bus, n. Fragments of cirrostratus as are seen moving rapidly beneath a rain-cloud; scud or rack.—frac'to-stra"tus, n. A broken and frayed stratus cloud. See CLOUD.

frac'tu-os'i-ty, 1 frak'tŭ-ŏs'ĭ-tı; 2 frāc'tŭ-ŏs'ĭ-ty, n. [-IES, pl.] The condition of being fractured or broken. [< L. frango, pp. fractus, break.]

frac'ture, 1 frak'chər or -tiur; 2 frāc'chụr or -tĭr, v. [FRAC'TURED; FRAC'TUR-ING.] I. t. To separate the parts of with violence; break; as, to fracture a rib.

II. i. To admit of or undergo fracture; as, glass fractures readily. Syn.: see BREAK.

frac'ture, n. 1. The act, mode, or result of breaking, or the state of being broken; a break; especially, the breaking, either partial or complete, of a solid body by application of force. Specif.: (1) Surg. The breaking of a bone; a break in a bone. It is simple or closed fracture when only the bone is broken without external wound; compound f., when an external wound communicates with it; comminuted f., when the bone is broken into several pieces; complicated or compound and comminuted f., when in addition to a fragmentary fracture of the bone, there is lesion of the soft parts, including blood-vessels or nerves; spiral f., when produced by a twisting movement, giving the broken ends a spiral appearance.

Pain . . . is penalty, and comes from the bruises which we receive from avoidable collision with Law, but the Law itself sustains not the least fracture.
H. WOOD in The Arena Jan., 1892, p. 201.

(2) Mineral. The form or kind of surface obtained by breaking in a direction other than that of the cleavage in crystallized minerals, and in any direction in massive minerals. 2. S. DANA Text-book Mineral. 1ā ıs conchoidal fracture when the surface is curved; even f., when the surface is nearly plane; uneven f., when the surface is rough and irregular; hackly f., when the surface is sharp or jagged. 2. [Rare.] Disagreement; rupture; as, a family fracture. 3. Phon. Same as BREAKING, n., 2. [F., < L. fractura, < fractus; see FRACTION.] — Colles's fracture (Surg.), a fracture, just above the wrist, of the ulnar and backward displacement of the broken fragment: so called from A. Colles, Irish physician.—depressed f., one by which a fragment of a bone of the skull is forced below its normal position.—extracapsular f., fracture of a bone near the joint but outside of the capsular ligament.—fir'-tree' box", n. A box arranged to support and prevent any motion of a broken limb.—greenstick f., a fracture in which the bone is bent, but not completely broken.—hickory fracture†.—impacted f., a fracture in which one fragment of the bone is driven into the other.—incomplete f., a fracture in which the bone is only partially broken through, as in greenstick fracture.—intra-articular f., a fracture of a joint.—linear f., a fracture without displacement of the fragments of the bone.—multiple f., a fracture of more than one bone, or of a single bone in several distinct places.—spontaneous f., a fracture due to a diseased condition of the bone and produced by a trifling strain, as by muscular contraction.—sprain f., a tearing away of a sliver of bone by the action of a tendon.—willow f., same as GREENSTICK FRACTURE.—frac'ture-a-bil(e), a. Susceptible of fracture; fragile.—frac'ture-al, a. Consequent on a fracture; involving fracture; as, a fractural injury.

The ancient sorcerers sometimes practise all sorts of frauds upon their credulous followers, by pretending to swallow live coals, and to pierce their bodies with knives.

Bot. Ancient Times in Siberia p. 213. [o. p. r. 1873.]

2. Law. (1) Any artifice or deception practised to cheat, deceive, or circumvent another to his injury. (2) Equity. Any act, omission, or concealment that involves a breach of duty, or the reposing or claiming of which is injurious to another, or by which an undue advantage is taken of another.

No action may be maintained for fraud unless damages can be proved, and, in actions on contract, when fraud has been established it renders the contract void from the beginning.

3. [Colloq.] One who acts fraudulently; a pretender; humbug; cheat; specif., in the postal service, a person, firm, or corporation declared by the Postmaster-General, under authority of law, to be engaged in obtaining money by means of false representations, fictitious representations, or promises, and therefore debarred from obtaining payment of money orders or the delivery of registered letters. 4. [Colloq.] A deceptive or spurious thing. 5†. A sham; a plot. [< F. fraude, < L. fraus (fraud-), deceit.]

Syn.: artifice, cheat, cheating, deceit, deception, dishonesty, duplicity, imposition, imposture, pretense, trickery, treason. A deceit or deception may be merely to gain some end of one's own, with no intent of harming another: an imposition may be to gain some advantage over others, or simply to make another ridiculous. An imposture is designed to obtain money, credit, or position to which one is not entitled, and may be practised by a street beggar or by high officials of state. All action that is base and unjust is dishonesty, but the term dishonesty is generally applied in business, politics, etc., to deceitful practises which are not directly criminal. Duplicity implies double deceit, and does not reach the gravity of fraud; a cheat is of the nature of fraud, but of a petty sort; a swindle is more serious than a cheat, involving larger values and more elaborate action. Fraud is commonly actionable at law: cheating and swindling are for the most part out of the reach of legal proceedings. Treason is chiefly used of dishonesty toward the state or sovereign, social relations, government, or war; treachery may be more harmful than fraud, but is not so gross, and is not ordinarily open to legal redress. Treason is a specific form of treachery or a subject to the government to which he owes allegiance, and is definable and punishable at law. See ARTIFICE; DECEPTION.— ANT.: fairness, good faith, honesty, integrity, truth, uprightness.

—actual fraud, a fraud in fact; positive, intentional fraud.—badge of f. (Law), in relation to fraudulent conveyances, a document which, while apparently innocent on its face, is associated with certain suspicious circumstances, as payment of an insufficient consideration, or indebtedness of the grantor.— constructive f., fraud inferred by law from acts or contracts which, tho not intentionally fraudulent, are prohibited because of their evil tendency. equitable f., in order (Pendl Service), an order from the central authority to a local official, prohibiting the delivery of letters to a firm or individual suspected of making an illegal use of the mails. pious f., a deception intended to bring about a good result, as to benefit the person deceived. 2. [Colloq.] One who shams piety.— statute of frauds and perjuries (29. Car. II. c. 3). a statute requiring all contracts for conveyance of land or its consideration of marriage, all agreements that are not to be performed within one year, all undertakings to be answerable for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, and all contracts for the sale of goods for the price of ten pounds and upward, to be in writing unless in the case of the sale of goods where receipt of part of the goods, or payment of earnest-money, renders writing unnecessary. The statute, or one practically similar to it, has been reenacted in nearly every one of the United States.— Yazoo f. (U. S.), the transaction by which, under an act passed in 1795, the State of Georgia sold the Yazoo companies 35,000,000 acres of land for $500,000. As it was ascertained that every member but one of the Legislature was a stockholder in one of the companies, the act was repealed in 1796. The U. S. Supreme Court held the last act unconstitutional, and in 1814 Congress paid $5,000,000 to the companies.

Chem.* In any system, the number of variables, such as temperature, pressure, concentration, etc., which can be changed independently without destroying any of the phases.— economic f., see under ECONOMIC.— f. fine, money paid on entry into an incorporated trade.— f. of the city, formerly, possession by a non-member of the documents conferring this distinction, usually presented in a valuable casket; as, the freedom of the City of London.— freedom of the seas, in war, exemption from seizure and search of the vessels of a belligerent of all private property of neutrals except contraband of war, as proposed at The Hague in 1907.— f. of the will, the power of self-determination claimed by some of man as responsible moral agent, involving, in its more complete conception, both freedom from external constraint or compulsion and also freedom from the dominance of passions, desire, or other forms of motive which constitute the so-called motives to volition and action. Determinism as opposed to freedom of the will has customarily urged as causes to account fully for actions either the total of the forms of influence specified above. In considering the arguments pro and con, it should not be forgotten that freedom of will is a matter of degree, and a subject of development. If, then, on the one hand external causes must be looked upon as compelling or constraining the mental states, on the other hand it is equally true that they easily definable limits, that the Self chooses its external environment and decides the weight of its influence; and, again, if it is true that motives influence the will, it is not less true that the will decides which of the motives which one shall be given control. Compare FREE; LIBERTY; DETERMINISM, 1 (2); INHIBITION.

Free'dom, n. A borough in Beaver county, Pa.

free'dom-ism, 1 fri'dŭm-izm; 2 fré'dŭm-ĭzm, n. [Rare.] Same as LIBERTARIANISM.

Free'man, 1 fri'măn; 2 fré'man, n. 1. A member of an ancient and extensive secret order or fraternity, dating from the middle ages: originally confined in membership to skilled artizans, but now having a far wider range of inclusion and possessing branches or lodges in all civilized countries.

The term Freemason grew out of the fact that only craftsmen not under the control of guilds were eligible. As the election was required to be unanimous, the members demoted themselves Free and Accepted Masons. The present form of organization is said to have been settled in London in 1717, with the avowed principles of charity, brotherly love, and mutual assistance. In 1725 Freemasonry was introduced into France, and in 1730 the first American lodge was founded. The order is divided into three principal degrees, of three grades, viz., apprentice, fellow-craft, and master-mason, each with its peculiar initiatory rites.

2. [f.-] A freemason. 3. [f.-] A freemason's apron. 4. [f.-] A member of the corporation of freemasons was not sufficiently organized to have had much influence on art.

free will. The power of self-determination regarded as a special faculty. It is much preferable and is now customary, however, to speak of the person, or self, as free or not free.

In the controversy over the doctrine of the freedom of the will, theology has opposed to it a form of determinism which either, like Mohammedanism, makes all human action depend upon the direct volition of the divine Will, or, like some forms of Christian theology, considers man's will to have lost its freedom and to be dependent upon an act of divine grace for its restoration to the power of choosing the highest good. Determinism, naturally in modern times, it is denied by a physiological or psychophysical theory which maintains that the conscious volitionary acts, even including the subtler forms of deliberate choice, are only epiphenomena, or secondary manifestations of the really causative energies and their effects in changes of the states of the brain.

freeze, 1 friz; 2 frēz, v. [FROZE; FROZ'EN, FREEZ'ING.] freez², j. i. t. 1. To convert into ice, as water; harden with cold; congeal. 2. To stiffen, injure, or kill by frost; as, a frozen ear.

French¹, n. 1. The language of France, belonging to the Romanic group of the Greco-Roman division of Aryan languages. See ROMANCE.

French is the descendant of the rustic or colonial Latin, spoken in the camps and colonies of Gaul. The original Celtic language of Gaul gave way to or blended with this, and in the 5th century the Franks, having conquered the country, introduced further foreign elements into the language, which they adopted as their own, giving it their name — French. In 854 the language acquired its first written document, the "Oaths of Strasburg." The period of Old French reaches to the 14th century; Middle French from then to the 16th century; and Modern French to the present time. Old French had two especially important dialects, the langue d'oïl, spoken north of the Loire, and the langue d'oc or Provençal, spoken south of it. See PROVENÇAL. Modern French descends from the former. In the Norman form the latter passed to England at the Conquest in 1066, and blended so intimately with Anglo-Saxon that French and English are identical in innumerable words. See ENGLISH; NORMAN FRENCH. Since the Middle French period French has been the language of diplomacy, fine art, cookery, and the European aristocracy.

The French or Frankish language is now a Romanic dialect, and its grammar is but a blurred copy of the grammar of Cicero. MAX MÜLLER Science of Lang. second series p. 280. [S. 1875.]

BYRON The Corsair can. 3, st. 8.

2. To be irritated, worried, or vexed; utter complaining expressions; as, the child frets. 3. To be violently agitation or commotion, as boiling or rippling water; hence, to rankle, as angry feelings; as, the murderous instinct that frets within him.

Rivulets of silvery sound, . . . Fretting over stony ground.
ALICE CARY A Lesson st. 9.

4†. To ferment. [< AS. fretan, contr. < foretan (= Goth. fraitan, devour), < for- (= Goth. -fra-) + etan; see EAT.] SYN.: see ANNOY. Compare FRETFUL; ANXIETY. — to fret in, to mix one kind of wine with another.

fret', n. To ornament with or as with fretwork.

fret', n. To ornament; adorn: confused with FRET'.

fret', n. To fasten or to strengthen; replenish.

fret', n. To ornament; adorn: confused with FRET'.

fret', n. 1. The act of fretting; an abrasion, corrosion, or wearing away. 2. An abraded, worn, or eroded spot; as, a fret in the insulation of an electric wire. 3. A state of irritation, ill temper, or vexation.

No fret of life can here intrude, To vex the sylvan solitude.
BAYARD TAYLOR Poet's Journal second evening, st. 3.

4. The commotion of the surface of a liquid, the result of fermentation or effervescence, of boiling, of a breeze or the like; as, the fret of beer. 5. A composition used by potters as a glaze; frit. 6. Pathol. (1) Tetter or herpes. (2) A chafing, especially between folds of the skin. 7. A side of a river-bank. 8. The wearing away of water as to expose a vein of ore, or where the accumulation of minerals indicates the proximity of such a vein. 8†. A flurry, as of wind.

fret', n. 1. Ornamental work in relief, done by carving, cutting, or embossing; in a broad sense, perforated or interlaced ornamental work in wood or stone or in painting: used also figuratively.

Of the greenest was their sward, embossed with its dark-brown frets of crag. CARLYLE Sartor Resartus p. 95. [c. 8.]

2. Art. An ornament much used in Greek art and copied with modifications in later art, characterized by angular interlocked or interlacing lines of various patterns.

JAMES FERGUSSON Hist. Arch. vol. ii, p. 470. [n. m. a. c. 1883.]

3. Her. A figure formed by two narrow bands in saltire, interlaced with a mascle. [< OF. frete, iron band < LL. ferrata, iron grating, < ferro, bind with iron. < L. ferrum, iron.] — curvilinear fret, fretwork in curved lines. — diamond f., a medieval molding consisting of a pattern of diamonds or rhombs interlacing and overlapping. — dovetail f., a fret that consists of diagonal lines, giving a wedge-shaped instead of a square appearance. — f.-f.'-board'', n. Mus. A finger-board when bearing frets. — f.-saw, n. A saw with a narrow blade and fine teeth: used for fine work, scrollwork, etc. — fret'-saw'', n. & t. — fret'work', n. Interlaced ornamental work composed of frets; perforated architectural work. — lozenge f., a Romanesque architectural fret in which diagonal ribs enclose lozenge-shaped panels; a diamond fret. — triangular f., a dovetail molding.

Fret.
1. Examples of the fret in architectural and decorative art.
2. Fret-saw.

fret', n. One of the slight orative art. ridges or bars on musical instruments of the guitar and fiddle class between which the strings may be stopped by finger pressure. [Cp. OF. frete, iron bar; see FRET', n.] fret' n. A coil of wire of precious metal, often ornamented with gems: worn by women in medieval times.

fret'-y, a. A frith; estuary.

fret'chard, n. One who is fretful or peevish.

fretet, n. To eat up; devour. — fretewil, a. Rapacious.

fret'ful, 1 fret'ful; 2 frĕt'fŭl, a. 1. Inclined to fret; showing vexation; disposed to peevishness; ill-tempered. 2. Indicative of or characterized by fret, ill humor, or worry; as, a fretful temper. 3. Agitated or tossing; as, the fretful waves. 4†. Corroding; abrading; wearing.

fret'less', 1 fret'les; 2 frĕt'lĕs, a. Untroubled.

fret'ted, pa. See FRET', v. 5 and 7.

fret'tage, 1 fret'ij; 2 frĕt'ăj, n. [F.] 1. The operation of strengthening the breech of a cannon by shrinking on frettes. 2. Frettes collectively.

fret-ta'tion, n. [Rare.] Annoyance.

frette', 1 fret'e; 2 frĕt'ē, n. Her. 1. Ornamented with fretwork. 2. Her. Covered with fretwork or interlaced bars, usually eight. See TRELLIS. fret'ty†.

frette', 1 fret'e; 2 frĕt'ē, n. A band or hoop of steel or wrought iron designed to be shrunk on the breech of a cannon. The loop is made smaller than the cannon-breech, and then expanded by heat and forced on.

fret'ted, 1 fret'ed; 2 frĕt'ĕd, pa. 1. Having fretwork.

JANE TAYLOR The Squire's Pew st. 3

2. Her. Interlaced. fret'ted†.

fret'ten†, a. Marked as with smallpox.

fret'ter, 1 fret'er; 2 frĕt'er, n. One who or that which frets.

fret'ty, 1 fret'i; 2 frĕt'y, a. 1. Inclined to fret. 2. [Colleq.] Rubbed; inflamed, as a sore. 3†. Covered with fretwork.

fre'tum, 1 fri'tum; 2 frē'tŭm, n. [FRE'TA, pl.] [L.] 1. A strait. 2. Anat. & Zoöl. A connecting passage; as, one of the embryo between the aortic bulb and the ventricle.

fret'ways, adv. In the manner of fretwork. fret'wiset.

fret'work, 1 fret'; 2 frĕt'wŭrk, n. From frewerk.

Freud, 1 froit; 2 froit, Sigmund (1856–1939). Austrian neurologist, founder of modern theory of sexual psychoanalysis; Interpretation of Dreams. — Freud'-an-ism, n. [Rare.] The theories or doctrines of Sigmund Freud, especially regarding the cause and cure of hysteria, and the significance of dreams. — Freud'-an-ism, n.

frev, 1 frev; 2 frĕv, adv. [Prov. Eng.] Early.

Frey', 1 frē; 2 fre, n. Scan. Myth. The son of Njord; god of rain and sunshine, and specif. of fruitfulness and prosperity, at which character all phallic worship was referred to him. His union with the giantess Gerth is a myth probably typifying the awakening of plant-life in the spring. He was worshiped principally at Upsala. See FREYR.

Frey, 1 frai; 2 frī, n. 1. Albert Romer (1858–), an American author, who refuted the Donnelly cipher theory of Shakespearian authorship. 2. Emil (1838–1912), a Swiss statesman: served in the Union army in the American Civil War; imprisoned in Libby Prison: returned to Switzerland; minister to United States, 1882–1888; president of Switzerland, 1888–1897. 3. Johann Jakob (1681–1752), a Swiss engraver.

Frey'a, 1 frē'a; 2 frā'a, n. Norse Myth. The goddess of love; daughter of Njord and sister of Frey. She is represented by some as the goddess of sensual love, corresponding to the Roman Venus, and by others as pure and very different from that name. Half of those who are killed in battle belong to her; the other half go to Odin. Often confused with Frigga. [< Icc. Freyja.] Freia; Frey'lat; Frey'la.

frey'-like, 1 frē'lik; 2 frē'lĭk, a. Resembling fresh coral.

frey'ne, n. A silicate of thorium and cerium, found in Norway.

Frey"ei-net', de, 1 frē"ā-nē'; 2 frē"ĕ-nĕ', Louis Claude de Saulses (1778–1842), a French navigator.

Frey"ei-ne'ti-a, 1 frē"ā-nē'shi-a; 2 frē"ĕ-nē'shi-a, n. Bot. A genus of tropical dioecious plants bearing flowers in spikes. F. banksii produces large, fleshy, edible fruits. [< L. C. Freycinet, French explorer.]

Frey'tag, 1 frai'tag; 2 frī'tăg, Gustav (1816–1895). A German novelist and historian; Die Ahnen.

F. R. G. S., abbr. Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society.

F. R. Hist. S., abbr. Fellow of the Royal Historical Society.

F. R. Hort. S., abbr. Fellow of the Royal Horticultural Society. [cultural) Society.

F. R. H. S., abbr. Fellow of the Royal Historical (or Horti-

Fri., abbr. Friday.

fri'a-ble, 1 fri'a-bl; 2 fri'a-bl, a. Easily crumbled or fri'a-bl', 1 pulverized; as, friable earth or stones. [< L. friabilis, < frio, rub.] — fri'a-bil'i-ty, n. fri'a-bl(e)-ness†, fri'and', 1 fri'ănd'; 2 fri'ănd'. [Archaic.] I. a. 1. Delightful to the taste; delicious. 2. Fond of dainty food. II. n. An epicure. [F. < friand, fry.]

fri'ar, 1 frai'er; 2 frī'ar, n. 1. A brother or member of one of the mendicant monastic orders. The best-known are the Augustinians or Austin Friars, Carmelites or White Friars, Dominicans or Black Friars, and Franciscans or Gray Friars.

2. Hence, loosely, a member of a monastic or military order. 3. (1) The friar-bird. (2) A sand-smelt or silverside, especially Menidia notata. (3) The friar skate. (4) [ir.] The angler (Lophius piscatorius). 4. Print. A light patch caused by imperfect inking of the form. [< F. frère, < L. frater, brother.] — begging friars, mendicant friars, = Cruciferi, Crouched, or Crossed Friars. 1. The Trinitarian order: so named from the cross worn by its members on their habits and staves. 2. A street in London, England.— fri'ar-bird', n. An Australian honeyeater or meliphagine bird (genus Tropidorhynchus); especially, Tropidorhynchus corniculatus, having a bare head and a stout bill surmounted by an excrescence.— f.-rush'y, n. A kind of Cyperus grass.— f.'s balsam, see BAISAM.— friar's-cap, n. Monk's-hood (Aconitum napellus).— friar's-chicken, n. [Sect.] Chicken broth with eggs dropped in it. — fri'ar-chicken', friar's-cowl, n. The English wake-robin (Arum maculatum), from the shape of its spathe; also, other species of Arum.— friar's-crown, n. An Old World thistle (Cnicus eriophorus).— f.-skate, n. The European white skate (Raia alba).— friar's-lantern, n. The ignis fatuus.— Gray F., formerly in England a Franciscan: so called from the gray habit.— F. Minor, see MINORITE, n.— Red F., a knight templar.— Reformed f., a member of a reformed religious order, especially of the Franciscan order of Observantines. — friar-hood, n. The condition of a friar; friars in general.— fri'ar-ling†, n. A little friar. fri'er-ling†, fri'ar-ly, a. Like a friar; unworldly; inexperienced. fri'er-ly†.

Fri'ar Ba'con. The friar Roger Bacon. See BACON, 9.

Fri'ar Dom't-nic,] dom'i-nic; 2 dŏm'i-nic. In Dryden's comedy The Spanish Friar, the principal and most comic character, satirizing the friar type.

Fri'ar Gor'und,] ger'und; 2 gĕr'ŭnd. An absurd popular orator, the chief character in Padre Isla's Gerundio, a romance satirizing the preaching of the period 1750.

Fri'ar John. In Rabelais's Gargantua, an outspoken, happy-go-lucky friar, Jean des Entommeures.

Fri'ar Lau'rence,] lŏ'rens; 2 la'rens. In Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet, the friendly friend of Romeo and Juliet, a Franciscan, who marries them.

Fri'ar Tuck. A jovial priest; associate and confessor of Robin Hood. He plays a prominent part in SCOTT'S Ivanhoe.

fri'ar-y,] frə'ər-i; 2 fr'ar-y, a. Pertaining to friars or to a friary.

fri'ar-y, n. 1. A monastery of a mendicant order. 2. The institution or practises of friars; monkery.

frib,] frĭb; 2 frĭb, n. A detached lock (of wool).— frib'by, a. Short; bobbed: said of wool. [Architects.

F. R. I. B. A. Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects.

frib'ble,]] frĭb'l, n. [FRIB'BLED, FRIB'LD†; FRIB'BLING,]] BLING.] 1. t. To treat or dispose of triflingly; fritter; as, to fribble away time. 2. i. To act in a frivolous way; as, to fribble with religion. 2. To totter; as, the old man fribbles.— frib'bler, n. One who fribbles; an insignificant trifler.— frib'bler-y, n.— frib'blish, a.

He was an empty frib'blish fellow, always laughing about nothing at all. Benvenuto Cellini tr. by J. A. Symonds, vol. i, bk. i, p. 210. (s. 1883.)

frib'bly, a. Of little value or importance; frivolous; silly; contemptible. [Cp. FRIVOLOUS.]

frib'ble, n. An insignificant or trifling action or characteristic; also, a trifler.

A port Fribble of a poet. THACKERAY Henry Esmond bk. iii, p. 213. (L.)

Fri'bourg, n. Same as FREIBURG.

fric'-a-dill,] frĭk'ə-dĭl; 2 frĭk'ə-dĭl'ə, n. A ball made of forced meat; croquette. [< FRICANDEL.] fric'a-delt [G.], fric'an-deau',] frĭk'ən-dō'; 2 frĭc'an-dō', n. [-DEAUX',] -dōz'; 2 -dōz', pl.] [F.] A cutlet of veal or other meat, fried or stewed, usually dressed with herbs, and served with sauce. fric'an-do't.

fric'an-del',] frĭk'ən-dĕl'; 2 frĭc'an-dĕl', n. [OF.] A dish of veal, prepared with eggs and spices. fric'an-delle't, fric'as-see',] frĭk'ə-sē'; 2 frĭc'a-sē', vt. To make into a fricassee. fric'as-see't.

fric'as-see', n. A dish of rabbit, chicken, or other meat, cut into pieces, stewed or fried, and served with a gravy. [< F. fricassée, pp. f. of fricasser, fricassee; cp. L. frico, rub.] fric'a-see'; fric'a-see't.

fric'a-see't, n. Also, a part-song of the 16th century.

2. A French dance of the 18th century, with pantomimic interpolations.

fric-a-tion', n. Friction; rubbing. fric'a-cle't.

fric'a-tile,] frĭk'ə-tĭl; 2 frĭc'a-tĭl, a. 1. Characterfric'a-tive,] ized or produced by friction: said of those consonant sounds which are produced by the forced escape and friction of the breath through a narrowed aperture, as sh, zh, th.

Cheth, defined as a 'fricative faucal,' was a strongly marked continuous guttural sound produced at the back of the palate. ISAAC TAYLOR The Alphabet vol. i, p. 385. (s. a. & co. 1883.)

2. Sounded by friction, as some musical instruments.

fric'a-tiv'es, n. A fricative consonant.

fric'a-tor't, n. A friction-article; harlot.

fricht, n. [Sect.] Fright.

Frick,] frĭk; 2 frĭk, Henry Clay (12/ı/1840–ı/ı/1919). An American coke-and-coal magnate and capitalist.

frick'le,] frĭk'l; 2 frĭk'l, n. [Prov. Eng.] A bushel basket.

fric'tion,] frĭk'shən; 2 frĭc'shon, n. 1. The rubbing together of two bodies; the rubbing of one body against another; attrition; as, friction produces heat. 2. Mech. & Physics. Resistance to motion due to the contact of surfaces. The force required to move a solid body, when lying upon another, varies directly as the force pressing the two surfaces together, but is independent of the area of contact. The ratio of the former force to the latter is known as the coefficient of statical friction. This motive force, which varies also with the roughness of the bodies concerned, is greatly reduced by lubricants. The force required to maintain uniform speed of movement in one body sliding over another through a fluid medium is a force causing the adhesion, which is termed the coefficient of kinetic friction. The resistance encountered when a wheel rolls on a plane surface is not friction, but a flattening of the wheel or a distortion of the surface. The resistance offered in this case is small compared to that in sliding friction. In all friction heat is developed, with corresponding loss of energy. Were friction absent from the mechanism of motions would be impossible, as the walking of a man on the ground, the running of a car on rails, etc. Friction between liquids or gases causes dimi nution of the speed of motion in the moving layers and imparts motion to the adjoining quiescent layers, both finally coming to rest with an increase of temperature. Friction between lubricated surfaces is very resistance to friction between liquids. Friction between a solid and a liquid does not in reality take place, the actual friction being between a layer of the liquid adhering to the surface of the solid and the remainder of the liquid. In a solid in which vibrations have been set up, as a spring, a moving or slipping over each other of the layers takes place, which is termed internal friction, accompanied by increased temperature and gradual cessation of motion.

3. Figuratively, an irritating conflict of opinions or views; lack of harmony; as, the discussion was attended with some friction.

There had already been friction between the President and the secretary on the subject of nominations. CARPENTER Recollections of Lincoln p. 374. (L. 1891.)

[F., < L. frictĭo(n-), < frictus, pp. of frico, rub.]

Syn.: abrasion, attrition, chafing, fretting, grating, grinding, interference, rubbing, wearing.— angle of friction, the maximum angle which the resultant of a pressure can have without sliding down.— external f., the resistance to motion that exists between any two bodies in contact.— f. at rest, the amount of friction between two counting bodies that are relatively at rest. The friction is less when one moves over the other.— fric'tion-ax'is, n. The line of direction of the resultant of all the forces acting on a link with friction at its joints.— f.-balls, n. pl. Mech. Metal balls of extreme hardness, usually of hardened steel: used to reduce friction in bearings. Iron friction-balls are used under swing-bridges.— f.-block, n. Mech. In a brake, a block applied to the revolving body to retard its motion.— f.-brake, n. 1. A brake that operates by means of friction. 2. A form of dynamometer invented by Prony. 3. An instrument for testing the antifriction qualities of a lubricant.— f.-breccia, n. Same as FAULT-ROCK. See FAULT.— f.-card, n. A card exhibiting the indicator-diagram of a steam-engine, showing the power developed without load.— f.-checks, n. pl. Brakes for raising a gun-carriage off its wheels after discharge, to prevent recoil.— f.-circle, n. Mech. A circle whose radius is that of a pin-joint multiplied by the sine of the angle of friction: used in graphic solution of problems concerning the equilibrium of pin-joints.— f.-clutch, n. Mach. A form of friction-coupling, designed to permit quick application or disconnection of power.— f.-composition, n. A mixture of such chemicals as will readily ignite on rubbing, as that used on the ends of matches, fuses, etc.— f.-cone, n. Mach. A form of friction-coupling in which one cone is thrust into another, securing a large frictional surface.— f.-coupling, n. Mach. A device for connecting two shafts in line, for transmitting rotation from one to the other, while permitting ready connection and disconnection.— f.-disk, n. Mach. A form of friction-gear in which a disk is set in motion by contact with a wheel at right angles with its face.— f.-drive, n. An extension of power by means of friction-gearing.— f.-factor, n. Mech. The coefficient of friction.— f.-fremitus, n. [NL.] A rubbing sensation felt on palpation, observed in cases of pleurisy and pericarditis, and caused by rubbing together surfaces of inflammatory exudation.

Friction-disk Clutch.

The two disks are the roughened surfaces of the serous faced with rubber or membranes.— f.-fuse, n. A fuse ig-leather, so that when nited by friction.— f.-gear, n. Mach. pressed together their impinging rotation from frictional ornament one shaft to another not in line there-will cause a transmis-with, by rolling frictional contact, be-sion of motion tween the peripheries of two disks.— the rotating disk to — f.-gearing, n. A system of friction-the other. gears, or friction-gears taken collectively or in the abstract.— f.-grinding, n. Paper-grinding by means of two rollers, revolving more quickly than the other, between which the rough paper is inserted.— f.-hammer, n. Mech. A drop-hammer raised for each blow by friction-rollers.— f.-head, n. Hydraul. The loss of pressure in a column of water due to friction.— f.-hoist, n. Mech. A small hoist containing a friction device constructed to slip if the load be too heavy for the motive power.— f.-ism.— f.-machine, n. A machine for generating static electricity by friction, generally between glass or hard rubber and pads, assisted with a conductor, usually metallic. A match tipped with a chemical mixture that ignites by friction.— f.-meter, n. An instrument for measuring the coefficient of friction of lubricants.— f. of a rubber belt (Mech.), the mutual adhesion between the plies of a rubber belt.— f.-plate, n. 1. Mach. A metal plate to save frictional wear on important parts of a machine: properly an antifriction plate. 2. A plate on a gun-carriage to assist in checking the recoil.— f.-powder, n. Same as FRICTION-COMPOSITION.— f.-primer, n. Mil. A primer used in field-guns, in which friction-powder is ignited by friction. f.-tube.— f.-ring, n. Mech. The flexible band of an expanding brake.— f.-roller, n. Mach. A roller introduced between bearing-surfaces to reduce friction: properly an antifriction roller.— f.-slip, n. Mech. The slip of a friction-clutch or coupling.— f.-socket, n. [U. S.] An implement designed to clutch a tool dropped in an oil-well and bring it to the surface by an overpull.— f.-tight, a. Mach. So perfectly adjusted, as friction-cones, that when one is moved friction is exerted at every point of contact.— f.-wheel, n. 1. A wheel transmitting rotation to another or receiving it from another by rolling frictional contact. 2. An antifriction wheel; a trunnion-roller.— kinetic f. (Mech.), the resistance encountered when moving one solid along the surface of another at uniform speed.— limiting f. (Mech.), the kinetic resistance developed by a body on the point of motion.— molecular magnetic f., the loss of energy in a magnetic circuit arising from hysteresis.— moment of f., the resisting force of friction on a rotating body multiplied by the perpendicular from the axis of rotation to the place of friction.— rolling f., the resistance between a rolling body and that on which it rolls, as that between a car-wheel and the rail: opposed to sliding f., as that between a journal and its bearings.— starting or static f., same as FRICTION AT REST.

Friction-wheels. The two large wheels are driven in opposite directions.

fric'tion-a-bl(e), a. Liable to, or subject to friction.

fric'tion-al,] frĭk'shən-əl; 2 frĭc'shon-al, a. Of, pertaining to, or produced by friction.— fric'tion-al-ly, adv.

fric'tion-less,] frĭk'shən-lĕs; 2 frĭc'shon-lĕs, a. Without friction.— fric'tion-less-ly, adv.

Fri'day,] frī'dı; 2 frī'dy, n. The sixth day of the week.

The ancient Scandinavians, Anglo-Saxons, and Germans all named this day from a goddess of the character of the Roman Venus, translating the Latin name dies Veneris, an astrologic naming. It was regarded as the lucky day. The Mohammedans observe Friday as their day for worship or assembly. The Roman Catholic Church, the Greek Church, and the Anglican Church recognize it as a day of abstinence, in memory of the crucifixion of Christ. Hence Friday is popularly regarded as an unlucky day. It is sometimes called "hangman's day," as the day commonly selected for the execution of criminals.

But once, on a Friday ('tis ever, they say,
A day when misfortune is aptest to fall).
SARA Good Day of Brethl st. 3.

[< AS. frigedæg, < Frigu (the goddess Frigga) + dæg, day.]

— Black Friday. 1. Any Friday marked by a public calamity, as in England by the defeat of the Pretender to Derby (Dec. 6, 1745) or by the financial panic of May 11, 1866, and in the United States by similar disasters in New York on Sept. 24, 1869, and Sept. 19, 1873. 2. Good Friday, from the color of the vestments worn on that day by the clergy.— Fri'day-faced't, a. Dejected; melancholy. — Good F., the Friday before Easter, specially observed by many Christian churches in commemoration of the death of Our Lord: called Great Friday in the Greek Church.

Fri'day's, n. In Defoe's Robinson Crusoe, Crusoe's native servant, a savage whom he rescues from a cannibal feast on a Friday. Hence, his, my, or your man Friday [Colloq.], one's assistant; in politics, a henchman.

fridge†, vt. To rub; fray.

fridg'et, vi. To frisk about; fidget.

Fri'dl-la,] frĭ'dl-lə; 2 frĭ'dl-lä, n. Teut. Myth. One of the Harlungen brothers, keepers of Freya's necklace. See HARLUNGEN.

fri'et, vt. To taunt; censure; rebuke.

fri'-del'te,] frĭ-dĕl'tē; 2 frē-dĕl'tē, n. Mineral. A rose-red manganese chlorarsenate (H.MnCaAsO5), crystallizing in the hexagonal system. [< Friedel, French chemist.]

Fried'land,] frēd'land or (G.) frĭt'lant; 2 frēd'land or (G.) frēt'lant, n. A town in East Prussia; the scene of Napoleon's defeat of the Russians, June 14, 1807.

Fried'län-der,] frĭd'land-ər or (G.) frĭt'lent-ər; 2 frēd'land-er or (G.) frēt'lant-er, Michael (1/2/1833–12/4/1910). An Anglo-German scholar, teacher, and translator; principal of Jew's College, London, from 1865; The Jewish Religion.

Fried'land-er's dis-ease'. A disease characterized by inflammation of the tissues of the arteries with proliferations which obliterate the lumen of the vessels.

Fried'reich's dis-ease'. 1. A congenital disease characterized by irregular gait and incoordination of the movements, without marked disturbances of the sensory functions, due to sclerosis of the postero-lateral columns of the spinal cord; hereditary ataxia. 2. An affection characterized by clonic contractions of paired groups of muscles occurring in rapid succession and causing a convulsive tremor, probably due to lack of cortical control.

Fried'rich,] [G.] See FREDERICK.

Fried'rich-sha,] frĭ'drĭns-shä; 2 frĭ'drĭns-shä, n. A village in the Rhine province, Prussia.

friend, vt. To befriend.

friend,]] frend; 2 frĭnd, n. 1. One who entertains

frend'',] affection, regard, or respect for another, and takes a strong interest in his welfare; an intimate and trustworthy companion. 2. One who regards a subject, institution, sect, or the like, with favor; a promoter; as, a friend of prohibition. 3. One not a foe; one of the same nation or party; an adherent; ally; as, political friends.

friend'ly,] frend'li; 2 frĕnd'ly, a. [-LIER; -LI-EST.] 1. Of or pertaining to a friend; characterized by love or kindly feeling; befitting friendship; amicable; as, a friendly act. 2. Having the disposition of a friend; ready to act the part of a friend; kind; favorable.

Friendly was he to behold, and glad as the heralding angel Walked he among the crowds.
LONGFELLOW Children of the Lord's Supper l. 50.

3. Promoting prosperity or success; favorable; propitious; as, a friendly wind. 4. Not hostile; on good terms; disposed to peace; as, a friendly competitor. 5. [F.] Pertaining to the Society of Friends. friend'ly-ish; friend'lich; friend'some.

Syn.: accessible, affable, amicable, brotherly, companionable, complaisant, cordial, favorable, genial, kind, kindly, neighborly, sociable, social. friendly, as said of persons, signifies having the disposition of a friend; as act of acts, is signifies befitting or worthy of a friend. The adjective friendly does not reach the full significance of the nouns "friend" and "friendship"; one may be friendly to those who are not his friends, and to be in friendly relations often implies little more than not to be hostile. In its application to persons, accessible is used of public and eminent persons, who might, if disposed, hold themselves at a distance from others. Companionable and sociable refer to manner and behavior; cordial and genial express genuine kindliness of heart. We speak of a cordial greeting, a favorable reception, a neighborly call, a sociable visitor, an amicable settlement, a kind interest, a friendly regard, a hearty welcome. The Saxon friendly is stronger than the Latin amicable; the latter may be merely formal; the friendly is from the heart. Fond is commonly applied to an affection that becomes, or at least appears, excessive. Affectionate, devoted, and tender are almost always used in a high and good sense; as, an affectionate son; a devoted friend; "the tender mercy of our God," Luke i, 78. See AMICABLE. Compare FRIENDSHIP.—ANT.: adverse, alienated, antagonistic, disaffected, estranged, hostile, ill-disposed, inimical, unfriendly, unkind.—friendly lead (Eng.), an entertainment organized among neighbors for the benefit of some needy person.—f. society, see BENEFIT.

friend'ly, a. [-LIES, 1 -li; 2 -dli, pl.] A person of friendly disposition; one not an enemy; especially, a native kindly disposed to explorers or invaders.

friend'ly, adv. With friendly intention; amicably.

Friend'ly Is'lands. See TONGA ISLANDS.

friend'ship, n. [FRIEND + -SHIP.] 1. Mutual liking, esteem, or regard cherished by kindred minds, as the basis of the mutual interchange of kind offices; mutual interest resulting from congeniality of sentiments or community of pursuits, or from a close intimacy or acquaintance, and leading to sympathy or helpfulness. 2. The state of being in such friendly relations.

Female friendships are of rapid growth.
THACKERAY, Duke p. 56. [A. 1870.]

3. [Archaic.] An act of friendly assistance; aid; relief; as, he has helped me often with his friendships. 4. Phren. The faculty that gives social feeling and fraternity; as, in this race friendship is largely developed. †5. Tendency toward unity; conformity; affinity.

Syn.: affection, amity, attachment, comity, consideration, devotion, esteem, favor, friendliness, good will, love, regard. Friendship is a feeling of confidence, enduring, affection, founded upon mutual respect and esteem. Friendship is always mutual; there may be unreciprocated affection or attachment, unreciprocated love is unrecognized and unappreciated devotion, but never unreciprocated or unrequited friendship; one may have friendly feelings toward an enemy, but while there is hostility or coldness on one side there can not be friendship between the two. Friendliness is a quality of friendly feeling, without the deep and settled attachment implied in friendship. Comity is mutual kindly courtesy, with care of each other's right, and amity a friendly feeling and relation, not necessarily implying special friendliness; as, the comity of nations, or amity between neighboring countries. Affection may be purely natural: friendship is a growth. Friendship is more intellectual and less emotional than love; it is easier to give reasons for friendship than for love; friendship is more calm and quiet, love more fervent; love often rises to intensest passion; we can not speak of the passion of friendship. Friendship implies a certain degree of equality, while love does not; we can speak of man's love toward God, not of his friendship for God. (There is more latitude in the use of the concrete noun friend: Abraham was called "the friend of God"; Christ was called "the friend of sinners.") See ACQUAINTANCE; ASSOCIATION; ATTACHMENT; LOVE.—ANT.: see synonyms for enmity.—Prep.: the friendship of one person for or toward another, or the friendship between them.

(2) An old-style war-vessel, in use from 1650 to 1840, smaller than a ship of the line but larger than a corvette, carrying twenty-four to fifty guns on the main-deck and on a raised quarter-deck, etc. Cupelicans f.-built, a. and forecastle, now called the spar-deck.

The United States Frigate "Constitution."

The word [frigate] is thus used of the large open boats, without guns, used for war purposes by the Portuguese in the East Indies during the 16th and 17th centuries. — The Seven Years' War (1756–1763) marked the definite adoption of the frigate, as a standard class of vessel, coming next to ships of the line, and used for cruising and fighting purposes.
Encyc. Brit., 11th ed., vol. xi, p. 231.

The double-banked frigates, which frequently carried as many as fifty guns, had flush upper decks and carried batteries on two decks. The advent of steam-power was accompanied by a marked increase in the size of frigates, and the steam-frigate became the most powerful of warships. In 1870 it was regarded as the type.
He was placed in command of this our first frigate on the same day when Congress designated the Stars and Stripes as our national flag.—U. S. C. Admiral Paul Jones p. 19, in M. fright, n. 1. Sudden and violent fear; a state of transient terror; as, overcome with fright.

The hero is not he who has no fear, but he who feels the fear or the mealbag or other object as soon as he can be induced to smell it.
BURROUGHS Birds and Poets p. 73. [n. m. & co. 1899.]

2. Anything ugly, ridiculous, or shocking in appearance, producing a vexation or alarm. [< AS. fyrhtu.]

The former a knave, and a fright to behold.
SAINT Polyphemus and Ulysses st. 1.

Syn.: affright, dismay, dread, fear, horror, panic, terror. Fear is the generic term; it may be sudden or lingering, in view of imminent peril or of distant and only possible danger; in the latter sense it is sometimes used. Horror involves a shock to the feelings and sensibilities, and may exist without fear, as when one suddenly encounters some ghastly spectacle; or may of a desperate but detested animal. Terror is looked upon him with horror. Where horror includes fear it is fear mingled with abhorrence. (See ABHOR.) Affright, fright, and terror are always sudden, and in actual presence of that which is terrible. Affright is a vivid sense of danger; one to desperate defense; fright and terror render one incapable of defense; fear may be controlled by force of will; fright and terror sometimes produce a nervous paralysis; one may cause one to fly, to scream, or to swoon. Fright is largely a matter of the nerves; fear of the intellect and the imagination; terror of the faculties, bodily and mental. Panic is a sudden fright, affecting numbers at once; vast armies or crowded audiences are liable to panic upon slight occasion. Dismay is a temporary loss of self-control from some overwhelming peril or sorrow. Dismay is more reflective, enduring, and despairing than fright; a horse is subject to fright or terror, but not to dismay. See AWE.—ANT.: see synonyms for STRANGE; compare precordial fright (Pathol.), fright due to a sudden pain about the heart.—to take f., to become suddenly afraid.

frigh'ten, 1 frɪt'n; 2 frɪt'n, vt. To throw into a state of fear suddenly; alarm suddenly; terrify; scare.

To frighten flocks of crows and blackbirds from the grain.
HALLECK Wyoming st. 5.

Syn.: affright, alarm, appall, browbeat, cow, daunt, dismay, intimidate, scare, terrify. One is frightened by a sense of fear addressed directly and suddenly to the senses; he is intimidated by an apprehension of contingent consequences dependent on some act of his own to be done or forborne; the means of intimidation may act through the senses, or may appeal only to the intellect or the sensibilities. The sudden rush of an armed madman may frighten; the quiet leveling of a highwayman's pistol intimidates. A savage beast is intimidated by the keeper's whip. Employers may intimidate their employés from voting contrary to their will by threat of discharge; a mother may be intimidated through fear for her child. To browbeat or cow is to bring into a state of submissive fear; to daunt is to give pause or check to a violent, threatening, or even a brave spirit. To scare is to cause sudden, unnerving fear; to terrify is to awaken fear that is overwhelming. See AFFRIGHT; APPAL.—fright'en-a-bl(e†, a.—fright'en-er, n. One who or that which frightens. fright'er†.

Trees are made to fruit while still quite small by cutting their roots. Spencer Biology vol. i, p. 225. [a. 1891.]

—fruit'ing. I. a. Producing fruit. II. n. The production of fruit.

fruit, n. 1. The edible pulpy mass covering the seeds of various plants and trees, as the orange, apple, pear, berry, etc.

Emerson, I believe, has spoken of the apple as the social fruit of New England.
Bunrovghs Winter Sunshine p. 124. [n. a. n. 1876.]

2. Any vegetable product used as food, or otherwise serviceable to man, as grain, cotton, or flax; also such products collectively, as, the fruits of the earth. 3. Bot. (1) In flowering plants, the ripened ovary, ovules, and its contents, together with such accessory or external parts of the inflorescence as seem to be integral with them. (2) In cryptogams, the spores with their envelopes and accessory organs.

Fruits may be classified as (1) fleshy, including berries, gourds, mel ns, oranges, apples, etc.; (2) druppaceous, such as the cocoanut, the peach, the cherry, and the olive; and (3) dry, including nuts, capsules, achenia, follicles, legumes, etc. (See these words.) By another method of classification fruits may be divided into (1) simple, (2) aggregate, (3) multiple, (4) collective, and (5) accessory, in which the true fruit is produced, as the young of man or animals, the product of manufacture, etc.; as, fruit of the loom. This is consequence or result of any cause; any outcome, effect, or result; as, the fruit of evil deeds.

Let a man do his work: the fruit of it is the care of Another than he. Carlyle Heroes lect. iii, p. 65. [L. & T.]

[F. < L. fructus (frui-), < fructus, or fruitus, pp. of frucr, enjoy.] fruict†.

Syn.: berry, grain, nut, root, tuber, vegetable. Fruit (L. fructus, frucr, enjoy, the same sit related in the kindred word fruition) originally denoted any profitable or enjoyable result or product, as "the fruits of righteousness," Phil. i, 11; and especially any vegetable or animal product of a healthful, agreeable or enjoyable kind; as, "Blessed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy ground, and the fruit of thy cattle," Deut. xxviii, 4. Gradually the word became restricted to edible products of plants, including all grains.

Fruit of all kinds, in coat Rough, or smooth rind, or bearded husk, or shell.
Milton P. L. bk. v, l. 341.

In botany, a fruit of a flowering plant is the matured seed-vessel and its contents, together with such accessory parts as become finally incorporated with them. Thus, in the botanical sense, not only apples, pears, peaches, tomatoes, figs, nuts, but all berries, nuts, grains, beans, pumpkins, squashes, cucumbers, and melons, as well as pinecones, the samaras or winged seeds of the maple, ash, or elm, and many other products, are fruits. Popular usage has, however, become much narrower. The grains have been dropped, and the tendency is to drop nuts also, so that a fruit is now generally understood to be the fleshy and juicy product of some plant, usually tree or shrub (and nearly always containing the seed), which, when ripe, is edible without cooking, and adapted for use as a dessert rather than as a salad. The quince, however, tho usually cooked before eating, is classed among fruits, and we sometimes speak of poisonous fruits, as the berries of the nightshade. A vegetable, in the popular sense, is any part of a herbaceous plant commonly used for culinary purposes, and may consist of the root, as in the beet and turnip; the stem, as in the asparagus, celery, and rhubarb (or pie-plant); a tuber, or underground stem, as in the potato; the foliage, as in cabbage and spinach; or of that which is botanically the fruit, as in the tomato, bean, pea, and eggplant. Thus the tomato is both a fruit and a vegetable, tho for table use and in the garden and market it ranks as a vegetable only. In like manner the pumpkin and squash, which are botanically fruits, are classed as vegetables; while the melon, which is of the same family, is termed a fruit. "The fruits of certain [w-growing perennial plants are specifically termed by horticulturists small fruits,' including the strawberry, raspberry, blackberry, gooseberry, currant, huckleberry, and cranberry. The term includes grapes, but excludes cherries." Century Dict. of Bot. Terms 1902. Edible products that grow under ground are commonly classed as vegetables, whether edible roots, as the beet, turnip, and carrot, or potatoes and onions, which are not true roots, but modified stems. Peanuts (groundnuts or goobers) are true fruits, the ripening underground. The fruit of the potato is the seed-ball produced, which is botanically a berry. The terms roots and root-crop are used specifically in the agricultural sense of beets, turnips, carrots, mangel-wurzels, etc., especially as designed for feeding cattle. Compare HARVEST.

Bot.* An order of polypetalous herbs of the fumitory family — closely allied to the poppy family, having dissected leaves and irregular flowers with 4 united petals and 6 diadelphous stamens. It embraces 7 genera and about 103 species. Fumar'i-a (ē.æ) [< L. fumus, smoke.] fu-ma'ri-ē†. fu-ma'ri-æ†.

fu-ma'ric, 1 fiu-mar'ik; 2 fū-mār'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or occurring in fumitory (Fumaria officinalis).— fumaric acid, a white crystalline compound contained in fumitory, and formed by decomposing malic acid.

fu'ma-rin, 1 fiu'mə-rin, -in or -in; 2 fu'ma-rin, -in or fu'ma-rine, -in, n. Chem. A white crystalline bitter alkaloid extracted from fumitory (Fumaria officinalis).

fu-ma'ri-um, 1 fiu-mē'ri-um; 2 fū-mā'ri-ūm, n. [-RI-A, pl. [LL.] A smoke-chamber in an ancient Roman house for drying wood and smoking meat and wine.

fu'ma-roid, 1 fiu'mə-roid; 2 fū'ma-roid, a. Chem. Of the character of fumaric acid. [< FUMARIC + -OID.]

fu'ma-role, 1 fiu'mə-rōl; 2 fū'ma-rōl, n. A small hole from which volcanic vapors issue. [< It. fumaruolo, < LL. fumarium, dim. of fumarium, chimney, < L. fumus, smoke.] — fu'ma-ro'lic, a.

fu'ma-ryl, 1 fiu'mə-ril; 2 fū'ma-ryl, n. Chem. The bivalent radical $C_2H_2(CO)_2$; as, fumaryl chlorid ($C_2H_2C_2O_2Cl_2$).

fu'ma-to'ri-um, 1 fiu'mə-tō'ri-um; 2 fū'ma-tō'ri-ūm, n. [-RI-A, pl.] An ancient Roman chimney, flue, fireplace, or apparatus, etc., to contain gases or the like, with which to destroy insects, scales, etc.; a fumigatory. [< L. fumus, smoke.] fu'ma-to'ry†.

Fum'bi, 1 fum'bi; 2 fūm'bi, n. A town in Aruwimi department.

fum'ba, 1 fum'bə; 2 fūm'ba, n. [Afr.] A sleeping-bag of matting used by natives in south-central Africa.

fum'ble, 1 fum'bl; 2 fūm'bl, v. [FUM'BLED, FUM'BLING.]

fum'bler, 1 fum'blər; 2 fūm'bler, n. [FUM'BLING.] I. i. 1. To handle clumsily or blindly; finger in a purposeless manner or with thoughtless repetition.

He could not think of a word to say; and twisting and fumbling his cap, did not know how to go.
GEORGE W. CURTIS Trumpa p. 59. [H. 1861.]

2. To stop or catch (a ball) in a clumsy manner, causing a delay, as in baseball or cricket.

II. t. 1. To feel about blindly or clumsily; use one's hands in an aimless, nervous, or awkward manner; grope about with uncertainty: often used figuratively.

With such clumsy tools as argument and logic, men only fumble at the lock of the spiritual world.
ARNOLD E. BARR Friend Olivia p. 432. [o. & co.]

— fum'ble, n. 1. Baseball. The act of fumbling a ball. 2. [Rare.] The act of searching aimlessly.— fum'bler, n.— fum'bling-ly, adv.

fume, 1 fūm; 2 fūm, v. [FUMED; FUM'ING.] I. t. 1. To subject to the action of smoke, vapor, or fumes; specif., to expose to the fumes of ammonia or other volatile chemical, to develop or improve, as in some photographic processes and in treatment of cabinet woods. 2. To fill, as a room, with vapors or smoke. 3. To exhale, as odoriferous or noxious gases. 4. To flatter inordinately. 5. [College slang.] To smoke (tobacco). 6†. To perfume, as with incense. II. i. 1. To emit smoke in burning; smoke. 2. To throw off gases. 3. To pass off in a mist or vapor.

Naught else but smoke, that fumeth soon away.
SPENSER Colin Clout's Come Home Again l. 120.

4. To express irritation or anger in manner, looks, or words; exhibit fretful passion. 5†. To be carried away by emotions or excesses as if by liquor or narcotic vapors. [< F. fumer, < L. fumo, < fumus, smoke.] Syn.: see BLUSTER.—fum'er, n. 1. One who fumes. 2†. One who perfumes.

fume, 2 fūm, n. [pearance; smoke-colored.

fu'mē, 1 fū'mē; 2 fū'mā, pa. [F.] Of smoky or hazy appearance.

fume, n. 1. Vapor, visible or invisible, especially as having narcotic, choking, or other sense-affecting qualities; reek; smoke; as, the fumes of sulfur. 2. Any state of mind that confuses or stupefies; especially, fretful anger.

'How dare ye, sir, speak to me in this tone?' cries the Doctor in a great fume. THACKERAY Henry Esmond p. 234. [R.]

3. Anything unsubstantial or evanescent; idle fancy. Nature was all smiling, and by a kind of sympathy she drew me in to laugh with her, and all my melancholy went off in fume.
WEBSTER in Priv. Corresp. vol. i. p. 118. [R. a. o. 1857.]

4. Metal. Metallic vapor, or metallic compounds as vapor, given off by gases from a smelting furnace, or the solid matter they deposit. 5. [Rare.] A person who fumes. 6. [Archaic.] Smoke. 7†. Excessive praise; flattering incense. 8†. Incense. [OF., < L. fumus, smoke.] —fume'-chamber, n. A chamber which gathers and discharges foul odors from a laboratory.—lead fume, n. Dust of various oxids, carried off with the gases evolved in smelting lead ores.

fu'mer-el, 1 fū'mar-el; 2 fū'mer-el, n. Arch. Same as FEMERELL.

fu-mette', 1 fū-met'; 2 fū-mēt', n. 1. The scent or high flavor of [wa-keep venison or other game. 2. The savory odor of meats while cooking.

Such a fumette from plump partridges and roasting pigs.
ROBERT JAMESON Letters to your Beau act i, sc. 3.

fu-met'z, 1 fū-met'z; 2 fū-mēt', n. A fumitory.

fume 'wort', 1 fūm'wŭrt'; 2 fūm'wôrt', n. A fumitory.

—pale fumewort, n. The colewead (Corydalis glauca).

fu'mi-duct, 1 fū'mi-dukt; 2 fū'mi-dŭkt, n. A smoke-vent.

fume'-duct',

fu-mif'er-ous, 1 fu-mif'ar-us; 2 fu-mif'er-ŭs, a. Sending forth smoke. [< L. fumifer, + fumus, smoke, + fero, bear.]

fu-mif'u-gist, 1 fu-mif'ū-jist; 2 fu-mif'yū-jist, n. [RARE.] One who or that which expels fumes or smoke. [< L. fumus, smoke, + fugo, cause to flee, < fugio, flee.]—fu-mif'u-gant, a.

fu'mi-fy†, vt. To fumigate or fill with smoke.

fu'mi-gate, 1 fū'mi-gēt; 2 fū'mi-gāt, vt. [-GA'TED; -GA'TING.] 1. To subject to the action of smoke or fumes, especially for disinfection or smoke. 2. To perfume. [< L. fumigatus, pp. of fumigo, fumigate, < fumus, smoke, + ago, drive.]—fu'mi-gant†, a. Fuming.—fu'mi-ga'tor, n. One who or an apparatus that fumigates; especially, a lamp for disinfecting by fumes.—fu'mi-ga-to'ri-um, n. [-RI-A, pl.] 1. A censer. 2. A fumatorium.—fu'mi-ga-to-ry, a. Cleansing by smoke.

fu'mi-ga'tion, 1 fū'mi-gē'shan; 2 fū'mi-gā'shon, n. 1. The act of fumigating, or disinfecting with fumes; specif., the destruction of germs by means of some disinfecting vapor, as that of chlorin or sulfur. 2. Smoke or fumes. 3. Incense, or the burning of it.

fum'ing, 1 fūm'ing; 2 fūm'ing. I. pa. Emitting or producing fumes. II. n. 1. The act of smoking or impregnating with smoke. 2. The act of fuming in festation of irritation. 3†. Idle fancy; vaporing.—Cadet's fuming liquid, same as ALKARSIN.—fum'ing-box', n. A box for exposing sensitized photographic paper to ammonia-fumes.—fuming nitric acid. See I. liquid of Libavius, fuming stannic chlorid ($SnCl_4$). By addition of water it forms butter of tin.—f. nitric acid, concentrated nitric acid, containing varying quantities of N_2O_5 dissolved in it.—f. spot, n. A censer or brazier.—fum'ing-ly, adv. In an angry manner; ragingly.

fu'mi-to-ry, 1 fū'mi-tō-ry; 2 fū'mi-to-ry, n. [-RIES, 1 -riz; 2 -riz, pl.] Any species of the genus Fumaria; especially, F. officinalis, now naturalized in the United States, a low herb with terminal racemes of rose-colored flowers; fume-colewort. [< F. fumeterre, < L. fumus terræ, smoke; terræ, gen. s. of terra, earth.]—climbing fumitory, a delicate biennial papaveraceous vine (Adlumia fungosa) that climbs over other plants by means of twining leaflstalks: cultivated for its white or purplish flowers.

fu-miv'o-rous, 1 fū'miv'o-rus; 2 fū-miv'o-rŭs, a. Arranged to consume (its own) smoke.

fum'mel, 1 fum'el; 2 fŭm'el, n. [Prov. Eng.] A blany.

fu'mous, 1 fū'mus; 2 fū'mŭs, a. 1. Bot. Smoke-colored; grayish-brown. 2†. Fumy. 3†. Producing fumes or causing excitations. [< F. fumeux, < L. fumosus, < fumus, smoke.] fu'mose†.—fu-mos'i-ty†, n. 1. Smokiness: characterized by fumes. 2. Fumes of strong drink; excitations. fu-mose'-ness, n. [RARE.]—fu'mous-ly, adv.

fum'y, 1 fūm'i; 2 fūm'y, a. Yielding or containing fumes; smoky; vaporous.—fum'i-ly, adv. Smokily; with fume.

fun, 1 fun; 2 fŭn, vt. [FUNNE'D, FUNN'D; FUN'NING.] [Colloq.] To indulge in fun; make sport; jest.

fun, n. 1. That which excites merriment; comical or frolicsome doings; jollification; also, the mirth and enjoyment derived therefrom; frolic; jollity. 2. That ruder or more boisterous quality of wit and humor, whether colloquial or literary, that excites hilarity or glee; whimsicality; drollery; joke; as, the wit of Sydney Smith, the humor of Douglas Jerrold, and the fun of Thomas Hood. [Of Celt. orig.; cp. Gael. Ir. fonn, delight.] Syn.: see AMUSEMENT; FROLIC.—for fun, for amusement; with no serious purpose.—in fun, sportively; not in earnest.—like fun [Colloq.], in lively, energetic, or thorough fashion.

fu'na, 1 fū'na; 2 fū'nä, n. [Japan.] A goldfish.

fu-nam'bu-list, 1 fu-nam'bū-list; 2 fū-nām'bū-llst, n. A performer on a tight or slack rope; rope-walker. [< L. funambulus, < funis, rope, + ambulo, walk.] fu-nam'bu-lant†; fu-nam'bu-lo†; fu-nam'bu-lust.—fu-nam'bu-late†, vi. To walk a rope.—fu-nam'bu-la'tion, n. [Rare.]—fu-nam'bu-la'tor†, *n.—fu-nam'bu-la-to'ry, a. Of, or pertaining to a rope-walker or rope-walking.—fu-nam'bu-lism, n. Rope-walking.

Fu-na'ri-a, 1 fū-nā'ri-a; 2 fū-nā'ri-ä, n. Bot. A genus of acrocarpous mosses, having a pear-shaped capsule with peristome single, double, or entirely wanting, and vesicular calyptra. F. hygrometrica, a cosmopolitan species, has its seta very hygroscopic, twisting when dry and straightening when moist.—f. fusiis, rope.]

Fun-chal', 1 fun-shēl'; 2 fun-chäl', n. A seaport town; capital of Madeira Island; a winter health resort.

Funck'-Bren-ta'no, 1 fungk'-brē-tā'nō; 2 fŭngk'-brĕn-tä'no, Franz (fränts'1862–.). A French librarian and historian.

func'tion, 1 fungk'shan; 2 fŭnc'shon, vi. To perform a function; act; as, the legs in some crustaceans function as gills.

func'tion, n. 1. Any specific power of acting or operating that belongs to an agent, or the specific work accomplished by it; as, the functions of the mind.

The soul in man . . . has a function called memory, or faculty of memory, of calculation, of comparison. EMERSON Essays, Over-Soul 1st first series, p. 215. [M. a. co. 50.]

2. An office or work properly belonging or assigned to a person in a particular station or character; an activity rightfully belonging to a person or thing; one's proper business, duty, part, or office.

It is one of the undisputed functions of government to take precautions against crime before it has been committed.
MILL On Liberty p. 185. [v. a ☞. 1863.]

3. The proper activity or employment of any faculties or powers.

Every man . . . is by God endowed with competent abilities to discharge some function or other necessary in life.
BARROW Sermons vol. i. p. 560. [v. c. ☞. 1845.]

4. Any property or fact depending upon or varying with another. 5. Physiol. A special office in the animal economy; the work done by any instrument a specific organ or system of organs; the normal action of any organ or set of organs. 6. A public or official ceremony; specif. (Eccl.), a service with full ritual and elaborate music; also, a sumptuous or formal social entertainment.

At night, in the Season, it is a sight to see the long line of carriages setting out for Almack's, or for some of the many masquerades, who are attending some great function in some great house.
A. LANG in Scribner's Magazine Aug., 1891, p. 150.

7. Math. A quantity whose value is dependent on the value of some other quantity or quantities; also, the variables, or independent variables, varying when they vary and remaining constant when they are constant; any algebraic expression containing one or more indeterminate variable quantities. 8. pl. The powers of the Dionysius. See HIERARCHY. 9†. Action; doing; producing. [OF., < L. functio(n-), < functus, pp. of fungor, execute.]—Abelian function. Math. A hyperelliptic function. 2. a ratio of double theta functions.—algebraic f. 1. A function whose value is derived from the value of its variables by algebraic operations. 2. One that is expressed as the solution of an algebraic equation.—alternate f., one that changes its sign when any two of the variables are interchanged.—analytic f., one that can be expressed by the symbols of analysis.—Appell's functions (Math.), of any two variables, the functions which are hypergeometric. [Named for P. E. Appell, French mathematician.]—cancellation f. (Math.), a function ϕ whose defining equation is $\phi^m(x+1) - \phi^m(:) = m.^{m-1}$.—Carnot's f., that expressing the relation between the heat given off by a body and the work it can do.—characteristic f. 1. thermodynamics, a function expressing all the properties of a system in equilibrium, in terms of its generalized coordinates, generalized forces, temperature, energy, and entropy.—circular f. (Math.), one which, like certain animals, as the chameleon, of changing color to resemble surrounding objects.—circular f., an angle or are considered as dependent on the ratio of the trigonometrical function.—complex f. (Math.), a function of a complex variable.—cyclic f. (Math.), a function that increases by a constant when any two variables are continuously through a cycle of values.—decreasing f., a function that decreases as its independent variable increases.—derived f., a function equal to a differential coefficient.—diaphoric f., see DIAPHORIC.—discontinuous f., one that does not continuously vary with any of the variables.—doubly periodic f., one that returns to the same value when the variable changes by either of two constant quantities, no one and the same variable.—elliptic f., one that is the inverse of an elliptic integral.—empiric f., one found by observation, expressing the relation between two quantities.—entire f., one whose function requires only addition, subtraction, and multiplication.—equipotential f., one denoting equality of potential.—even f., one that remains unchanged when the variables change its sign.—explicit f. (Math.), a function expressed directly in terms of other quantities.—fractional f., one which has no algebraic form for its values out of a finite portion, as $Ence's$ Brit. meromorphic f.†.—func'tion-rails', n. pl. Railroad. Switch-rails.—Green's f., any one of a number of functions, due to Green, which are of service in finally solving problems of electrostatics.—harmonic f. (Math.), any real function, V, that satisfies Laplace's equation, especially by employing only two variables.

—homogeneous f., a function which, when its terms are all of the same degree in the variables.—hyperbolic f., any one of a series of functions bearing the same relation to a hyperbola that hyperbolic functions do to a circle, and called the hyperbolic sine (s'nh), hyperbolic cosine (cosh), etc.—implicit f., one the determination of whose value requires the solution of one or more equations of condition.—increasing f., a function that increases when its variable increases.—inverse f. or inverse of a f., that formed from any function by making the variable the function and vice versa without changing the relation between them.—irrational f., one involving the extraction of an indicated root which can not be expressed as a rational function.—lacunary f. (Math.), a function that ceases to exist over a part of a plane called a lacunary space, because at each point in such part it possesses an essential singularity.—linear f. (Math.), a function whose variables are of the first degree, and which are only added or subtracted from each other or multiplied by constants.—octahedron f., a function of the fourth degree such that its fourth derivation is identically = 0, the canonical form, being $xy(x^3-y^3)$.—odd f., one that changes its sign, but not its absolute value, when the algebraic sign of its variable is reversed.—periodic f., one whose value is unchanged when the variable is increased or diminished by a certain constant called the period.—perturbative f., the expression for the potential of a force that disturbs the elliptic motion of a planet around the sun.—rational f., one formed by the operations of addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division only.—symmetric f., one whose value is not altered by interchanging the variables.—transcendental f., one that is not algebraic.

func'tion-al, 1 fungk'shan-al; 2 fŭnc'shon-al, a. 1. Of or belonging to the proper office or work of an agent. 2. Physiol. Pertaining to organic action or the functions of an organ.

It would appear . . . that the lachrymal glands do not . . . come to full functional activity at a very early period of life.
DARWIN Emotions p. 164. [A. 1873.]

3. Performing the functions of an organ; not rudimentary 4. Math. Pertaining to, indicating, or depending on a function. [< LL. functionalis, < L. functio(n-): see FUNCTION.]—functional adaptation (Biol.), the self-adaptation of an organism to a new environment.—f. disease, a disorder affecting the functions of an organ as distinguished from the substance of the organ.—f. equation (Math.), an equation defining an operator instead of a magnitude.—f. phenomena, those manifestations or symptoms produced by some modification, normal or abnormal, in the action of an organ or organs.—func'tion-al-ly, n. The condition of being or possessing a function.—func'tion-al-ize, vt. [Rare.] To give a function or office to.—func'tion-al-ly, adv.

func'tion-a-rism, 1 fungk'shan-a-rizm; 2 fŭng'shon-a-rĭsm, n. The estate or quality of a functionary.

func'tion-a-ry, 1 fungk'shan-a-ri; 2 fŭng'shon-ā-ry, n. [-RIES, 1 -riz; 2 -riz, pl.] A person who has a public function; an official.

Beside the ministers, there was another functionary whom the king's opponents assailed with much bitterness.
H. TWISS Lord Eldon vol. ii. p. 72. [c. & ☞. 1844.]

func'tion-ate, 1 fungk'shan-et; 2 fŭng'shon-āt, vi. [-A'TED; -A'TING.] To perform a function; serve an office; act; officiate. func'tion; func'tion-ize† [Rare]. [function.

func'tion-less, 1 fungk'shan-les; 2 fŭng'shon-lĕs, a. Without fund, 1 fund; 2 fŭnd, n. 1. To convert into a single fund, as various items of indebtedness, so as to form more or less permanent debt bearing a fixed rate of interest; as, to fund a public debt.

The funded debt of a government consists of stock issued for a term of years, or sometimes of perpetual securities, bearing a fixed rate of interest. A floating debt is funded by such loans in order to redeem treasury bills or warrants or to discharge forced loans or to tide over temporary distresses.

The plans which Hamilton made for funding the debt, . . . met at the time with terrible opposition.
E. B. HALE United States p. 254. [CHAUT. 1887.]

2. [Eng.] To invest in the funds. 3. To furnish money for; finance (an enterprise). 4. [Rare.] To amass; store.—fund'a-ble, a.

fund, n. 1. A sum of money or stock of convertible wealth employed in, set aside for, or available for a business enterprise or other purpose. 2. Specif., (1) The quick capital or available means of a business firm or corporation; as, the fund or funds of a bank.

A fund may be seeking for productive employment, and find none adapted to the inclinations of its possessor: it then is capital still, but unemployed capital. J. S. MILL Pol. Econ. bk. i. p. 68.

(2) An invested capital the income from which is devoted to a special object; a charitable trust; a foundation. (3) Money gathered for or to be appropriated to a specific object; as, the fund raised for a public charity. 3. Money lent to government; a funded debt: used in the plural; as, the funds have risen. 4. pl. [Colloq.] Money; as, he is out of funds. 5. A reserve store; an ample stock; as, an unfailing fund of humor. 6†. Bottom. [< F. fond, < L. fundus, bottom.]—consolidated revenue fund, in the autonomous British colonies, a general revenue fund created under the provisions of the Constitution Act, which can be disbursed only for certain specific purposes indicated in that act and is subject to certain charges.—f. and lease, see LEASE.—contingent f. (Com.), an amount reserved or laid aside with which to meet specific exigencies.—fun'd'hold'er, n. An investor in the public funds; a holder of public securities.—f. monger, n. [Rare.] A dealer or speculator in funds; a stock-broker.—f.-mongering, a. & n.—public funds. 1. The money on hand or immediately available in the government treasury. 2. Public securities (as those in England) standing in the form of annuities redeemable at the pleasure of the government. Compare fund, n., 3.

fund'a, 1 fun'da; 2 fŭn'da, n. [Gael.] A kind of basket of a long compress split at each end nearly to the middle; used in fracture of the lower jaw. [L., sling.]

fun'dage†, n. Foundation. [fundus.

fun'dal, 1 fun'dal; 2 fŭn'dal, a. Of or pertaining to the fun'da-ment, 1 fun'da-ment or -mant; 2 fŭn'da-ment, n. 1. A fundamental principle or element; as, an important fundament in this department of learning is the resolution of their center distances into simple units of measure. 2. The part on which the body rests in sitting; buttocks; also, the anus. 3. An angle. 4†. Foundation. [< OF., < L. fundamentum, < fundus, bottom.] fun'de-ment†.

fun'da-men'tal, 1 fun'da-men'tal; 2 fŭn'da-mĕn'tal, a. 1. Relating to or fulfilling the purpose of a foundation or groundwork; indispensable; primary; essential; basal. 2. Geol. Located at the bottom; constituting the lowest stratum or formation; as, fundamental rock. 3. Music. Radical; applied to that tone of a chord, considered as being its foundation or root, or to the tone produced by the whole of a vibrating body as opposed to the higher tones produced by its parts, which are called harmonics. [< L. fundamentum; see FUNDAMENT.]

fundamental bass, a bass part that contains the fundamental notes of chords.—f. body, a body that can not rotate; a hypothetical motionless object on which all motion is relative: postulated by certain German thinkers in support of the theory of Leibnitz that space and motion are purely relative.—f. forces, opposing theory space itself is the thing without motion.—f. colors, the primary colors.—f. equation, any one of three partial differential equations expressing the relations between the six fundamental magnitudes of a surface.—f. tissue, the unmodified or slightly modified tissue of plants; the typical parenchyma.—f. tones, the tones from which harmonic chords arise.—fun'da-men'tal-ist, n. One who believes in the basic truths of the Bible; distinguished from modernist.—fun'da-men'tal-ly, adv.—fun'da-men'tal-ly, adv.—fun'da-men'tal-ness, n.

fun'da-men'tal, n. 1. Anything that serves as the foundation or basis of a system of belief, as a truth, law, or principle; a primary and necessary truth. 2. Mus. The note on which a chord is formed. 3. Acoustics. A note considered with reference to its overtones.

fun'da-to'ri-al, 1 fun'da-tō'ri-al; 2 fŭn'da-tō'ri-al, a. [Rare.] Of or pertaining to a founder.

fund'ed, 1 fund'ed; 2 fŭnd'ĕd, pa. 1. Converted into a permanent loan or into bonds or the like payable at a future time with interest; as, a funded debt. Compare FUND', v. 2. Accumulated and invested; especially invested in public securities.

The traditions and habits of society are to a great extent what might be called funded or accumulated good feeling.
T. W. HIGGINSON Women and Men ch. 15, p. 77. [in. 1888.]

fund'er, 1 fund'er; 2 fŭnd'er, n. One who funds or is in favor of funding a public indebtedness; one who favors a sinking-fund; especially, a citizen of Virginia who after the Civil War was in favor of funding and paying the whole State debt, instead of repudiating part of it.

fun'di, 1 fun'di; 2 fŭn'dē, n. A small millet-like grain (Paspalum exile), cultivated for food. fun-dun'gi-, fun-dic'o-lar, 1 fun-dik'o-ler; 2 fŭn-dĭk'o-lar, a. Zool. Dwelling on the bottom of the seat opposed to littoral. L. fundus, bottom, + colo, inhabit.

fun'dil-form, 1 fun'di-fôrm; 2 fŭn'dĭ-fôrm, a. Anat. Sling-like; as, the funduliform ligament of the tarsus. [< L. fundus, sling, + forma, form.]

fund'ing, 1 fund'in; 2 fŭnd'ĭng, n. 1. The act or process of changing a floating debt or debts into a permanent loan, or of providing a sinking-fund.

The practice of funding has gradually enfeebled every state which has adopted it. Bowen Polit. Econ. ch. 17, p. 419. [s. 1889.]

2. Investment in government funds.—funding system, a system of public finance that converts floating indebtedness into a funded debt. See FUND, v. & n.

fun'gous, 1 fun'gus; 2 fŭn'gŭs, a. 1. Pertaining to or of the nature of a fungus; spongy. 2. Growing up in a sudden or unsubstantial manner, like a mushroom; springing up suddenly. 3. Characterized by the presence of fungi or fungoid growths. [< L. fungosus, < fungus, a fungus.]

fung'shui',] fun'-shwi'; 2 fŭng'-shwĭ', n. [Chin.] The fêng'shui',] system of geomancy practised by the Chinese in their selection of sites for dwellings and for graves. dwellings, etc. The location of burial-places has, according to this doctrine, a very important influence upon the fortunes of the living, in so far as it meets with the approval or disapproval of certain spiritual influences, winds, and waters. Belief in these agencies is still widespread among the masses of the population, and much of the local feeling manifested during the lower classes' opposition to railroads and as the railroad and the telegraph are traceable to it. [Chin. fung, wind, + shui, water.]

Fung'tian, 1 fung'tian. Same as MUKDEN.

fun'gus, 1 fun'gus; 2 fŭn'gŭs, n. [FUN'GI, 1 -jai; 2 -jī, or FUN'GUS-ES, pl. 1. Bot. A thallophytic plant destitute of chlorophyl, and deriving nourishment wholly or almost wholly from organic compounds, as a mushroom, toadstool, puffball, mold, or mildew.

The fungi reproduce chiefly by sexual spores. They are divided (1) morphologically, into 3 classes: Phycomycetes, Ascomycetes, and Basidiomycetes; and (2) physiologically, as parasites and saprophytes. Their chemical composition is complex and variable. They contain proteids, cellulose, sugars, gums, resins, acids, alcohols, alkaloids, and various pigments, but no starch. More than 40,000 species have been described, many of them microscopic. Some are edible, others poisonous; the antidote being atropin, stimulants, etc. Many have an economic interest, others cause diseases of plants and animals.

2. Pathol. A soft, spongy, morbid growth or abnormal excrescence. [< L. < Gr. sphongos, sponge.] —fungus bird (Bot.), any phycomycetous fungus. See PHYCOMYCETES.—brack'et-fun'gus, n. A fungus of the order Agaricales growing on a tree-trunk, resembling an inverted bracket, as others do a toadstool.—f. cellulose, n. Fungus which is in panded part, called the pileus, or cap, supported by a stem; a mushroom or toadstool.—fungi imperfecti (Bot.), imperfectly developed fungi, or those whose reproductive forms and relationships are unknown: 400 genera are included in the three orders, Sphæropsidales, Melanconiales, and Mucedinales, which they have been divided.—fun'gus-ine, n. A beetle that lives in or upon fungi, as an endomycid or mycetophagid.—f. cellulose, n. The cellulose found in fungi: a term used by De Bary and others. It always resists the action of nitric acid and copper oxid, but has the same chemical composition as ordinary cellulose.—f. cerebri (Pathol.), hernia of the brain.—f. disease, n. Mycetoma.—f. fungin, n. A nitrogenous proteid gum, which forms an inhabit fungi.—f. midget, n. f. hematodes, a soft bleeding or ulcerating carcinomatous tumor of rapid growth.—f. pit, n. A pit or cavity containing fungus or other fungi.—f. spawn, n. A mass of earth and mycelium, used for propagation (as of the Polyporus tuberaster in Italy).—f.-tinder, n. Tinder made from a fungus, as from Polyporus igniarius.—hedge-hog f., same as HEDGEHOG.—horsehead f., same as HORSETAIL MUSHROOM.—house-f., n. Any saprophytic fungus growing on moist wood in houses.—milk-f., n. Any species of Lactarius, a genus of agarics yielding white or colored juice. L. volemus and L. deliciosus are edible.—shelf-f., n. A fungus attached to its supporting surface like a shelf.

fun'gus-y, a. Diseased or overspread with fungus.

fu'nic, 1 fiū'nik; 2 fū'nĭc, a. [Rare.] Of or pertaining to the funis or umbilical cord; funicular; as, the funic murmur.

fu'ni-cle, 1 fiū'ni-kl; 2 fū'nĭ-cl, n. 1. A small cord, cord-like appendage, ligature, or fiber. 2. Entom. That portion of an antenna between the pedicel and the club. 3. Anat. & Bot. A funiculus. [< L. funiculus, dim. of funis, rope.]

fu-ni'ic-u-lar, 1 fiu-nik'yu-lar; 2 fū-nĭc'yu-lar, a. 1. Pertaining to, consisting of, or like a funicle or funiculus; produced by a cord or rope. 2. Anat. (1) Pertaining to a cord or funiculus; as, the funicular artery of the spermatic cord. (2) Composed of or resembling funiculi or ular action, the drawing force exerted by a rope or cord the ends of which are fastened, when it is pressed or pulled transversely, as in the case of a bowstring.—f. cord (Anat.), the umbilical cord.—f. curve, a curve, as illustrate the mechanical principles of the block and fall.—f. railway, a cable-railway, more frequently one for the ascent of mountains.—f. tissue (Zoöl.), the connective tissue of the endocyst of a polyzoan, so called because generally one or more strands have the form of a funiculus. [way.

fu-ni'ic-u-lar, n. 1. A funicular polygon. 2. A cable-rail-

fu'ni-cule, 1 fiū'ni-kiūl; 2 fū'nĭ-cūl, n. A funicle or funiculus.

Fu-nic'u-lin'e-æ, 1 fiu-nik'yu-lin'i-i; 2 fū-nĭc'yu-lĭn'ē-ē, n. pl. Zoöph. A subsection of spicate polyps with polyps on both sides of the rachis in distinct rows.—fu-nic'u-lin'e-an, a.

fu-nic'u-li-ti'tis, 1 fiu-nik'yu-lai'tis or -li'tis; 2 fū-nĭc'yu-lī'tĭs or -lī'tĭs, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the spermatic cord. [< L. funiculus.]

fu-nic'u-lus, 1 fiu-nik'yu-lus; 2 fū-nĭc'yu-lŭs, n. [-LI, 1 -lai; 2 -lī, pl.] [L.] 1. A cord, small rope, or the like. 2. Anat. (1) A small cord-like structure, especially one composed of fibers enclosed in a tubular sheath; as, the funiculi of a nerve. (2) The umbilical cord. 3. Bot. (1) The cord or stalk that connects the ovule or seed with the placenta; a funicle. (2) The hyphal band connecting the peridioium with the inner wall of the pericarp in the Nidulariaceæ. 4. Entom. (1) The main tendon of the abductor muscle of the third joint of the antenna lying between the scape and the club. 5. Zoöl. A cord, ligament, or the like, as in certain myrinpods, connecting the embryo with the amnion: in polyzoans, connecting the stomach with the body-walls. 6. In early German law, a rope used in measuring land. 7. Physics. A self-contracting ether: formerly assumed by some to account for phenomena now known to be due to the elasticity of the ether. 8. [l-] Anat. (1) The funiculus umbilicalis in embryonic ruminants, a cord temporarily joining the amnion and chorion after they become closed.—f. cuneatus, a bundle of fibers in the medulla oblongata and spinal cord. f. gracilis, a strand of fibers in the spinal cord and in the medulla oblongata, extending along the posterior median fissure from the middle of the back to the cerebellum.—f. of Rolando (Anat.), in the medulla oblongata, a longitudinal eminence on each side of the funiculus cuneatus: named for L. Rolando (1773–1831), an Italian anatomist.—f. spermaticus (Anat.), the spermatic cord.—f. teres (Anat.), a bundle of fibers from the facial nerve that causes a projection on either side of the median line in the floor of the fourth ventricle of the brain.

fu'nis, 1 fiū'nis; 2 fū'nĭs, n. [L.] Anat. A cord or cord-like structure. 2. Embryol. The umbilical cord.—fu'ni-form, a. Having the form of a cord or rope.—fu'nil'i-form, a. Resembling a cord or rope; tough; flexible; formed of cord-like fibers. fu'ni-cal'i-form†.—fu'ni-pen'du-lous, a. Like a hanging cord; of or pertaining to a simple pendulum.

fur'lough, n. 1. A temporary absence of a soldier or sailor by permission of the commanding officer. In the English army used for the leave of absence granted to both officers and enlisted men, and used in the same way in the Continental army to enlisted men, officers being granted leave of absence. In the United States navy a furlough is an extended leave of absence granted to an officer, or a suspension from duty by executive order. In the former case the officer is on furlough, in the latter furloughed. In the Indian Civil Service it is equivalent to a leave of absence. 2. By extension, a holiday or vacation. 3†. A permit or passport. [< D. verlof, < Dan. forlov, < for- (= FOR-) + -lov, < Ice. lof, leave, < -lofa, in orlofa, allow.] fur'loet.

fur'nace, 1 fûr'nes; 2 fŭr'nac, vt. [FUR'NACED; FUR'NACING.] 1. To heat, fuse, or refine in or as in a furnace. 2†. To throw out as flames or sparks from a furnace.

fur'nace, n. 1. A structure or apparatus containing a chamber for heating, fusing, hardening, etc., by means of a fire beneath, as for melting metal, baking pottery, evaporating water, etc. See list below. 2. The fire-box or fire-chamber of a steamboiler, locomotive, etc. 3. Short for iron-furnace. 4. A severe test or trial. 5. A volcano or its fires. 6. Mining. A large fire used to create a current of air for ventilating shafts, galleries, etc. 7†. An incubator. [OF. fornais, < L. fornax (fornac-), < furnus, oven.]—fur'nace-bar', n. A grate-bar.—f.-bridge, n. Same as BRIDGE', n., 4.—f.-charger, n. A weighing apparatus for feeding into a furnace-mouth the proper proportions of ore, fuel, etc.—f.-gas, n. Gas produced in a furnace.—fur'nace-man, n. One who attends to a furnace. fur'nac-er†.—f.-plate, n. Rolled iron or steel proper for making a fire-box.

Domestic Heating-furnace.
a, ash-pit; ab, air-box; b, body feeding into a furnace-mouth the fire-pot; h, h, hot-air pipes; r, radiator; s, smoke-flue; w, water-front.

PARTIAL LIST OF FURNACES.

Furnaces are named (1) from the service performed, use, or business in which they are used; as, air-heating furnace, annealing-f., arsenic-f. (for reducing arsenical pyrites in white arsenic), alkali-f. (in the manufacture of soda), assay-f. (a cupeling-furnace, or the like), bar-heating f. (for iron or steel preparatory to rolling), blister-f. (for smelting blister-copper), blowing-f. (a furnace in which glass objects are reheated to soften them, or a glass-furnace from which the melted material is taken to be blown), boiler-f. (for heating water in a steam-boiler), calcining-f. (a reverberatory furnace, as for calcining ore or gypsum), carbonizing-f. (for wood, electric-lamp filaments, etc.), cementation-f., cementing-f., or converting-f. (for converting wrought iron into steel by carbonizing), cupeling-f., cupellation-f. (for testing ore by melting in cupels), decarbonizing-f. (for cast iron or steel), decomposing-f. (used in soda-making to decompose salt), dental or dentists' f. (for vitrifying porcelain teeth), desulfurizing-f. (for ore or metals), enameling-f., evaporating-f., flashing-f. (for flashing glass), flattening-f. or flatting-f. (for flattening split glass cylinders, as in making window-glass), fritting-f. (for melting glass-making material), garbage-f. (a destructor), hardening-f. (for stiffening hat-bodies), improving-f. (a calcining and refining furnace), liquation-f. or liquidation-f. (for separating metals of different melting-points), melting-f. (for glass, etc.), mercury-f. (for obtaining mercury by sublimation), soldering-f., plumber's f. (a portable soldering-furnace), pot-f. (for hot-tile-glass), reducing-f. (for ores), refining-f., regenerating-f., regenerative f., or regenerator f. (a metallurgical furnace in which the outgoing gases heat the incoming air), reheating-f. (for blooms), reverberatory f. (see REVERBERATORY), roasting-f. (for ore), scaling-f. (for removing scale from sheets, as in the manufacture of tinplate), smelting-f., soldering-f. (for melting solder), spreading-f. (a flattening-furnace), sweating-f. (a liquation-furnace), tempering-f., test-f. (a cupelling or refining-furnace for argentiferous alloys), welding-f., etc.: (2) from some mechanical feature, arrangement, or characteristic: as, arc f. (in which an electric arc is used for melting steel, etc.), blast gas-f. (gas-burning, with forced draft), block-f. (a bloomery), blowpipe f. (having powdered fuel blown through a pipe), crucible f. (for reducing ore, etc.), cupola f. (for melting iron, etc.: see CUPOLA), diaphragm f. (for roasting ores while they drop from one shelf to another), dumb f. (for ventilating a mine), electric f. (a smelting-furnace in which the heat is caused by an electric current), engine-f. (a boiler-furnace), flowing-f. (a cupola furnace), gallery f. (used in vitriol distillation), induction f. (in which an iron ring or circular channel, forming a secondary circuit, is used to fuse metals, as iron or steel, when an alternating current is applied to a primary circuit), injection f. (a laboratory furnace heated by a flame of gas and air), lamp-f. (for laboratory use), muffle-f. (a cupelling-furnace having a muffle), open-hearth f., reflecting-ure f. (acting by heat reflected from a vertical arc), revolving f. (for roasting ore), second-furnace (for smoothing irons), rotary f. (see ROTARY), shaft-f. (an ore-reducing furnace in which the charge falls through the flames in a chimney), thermal f., tank-f., wind-f. (for melting, having a powerful natural draft), etc.: (3) from the substance treated or produced: as, cast-steel f. (a cementation furnace for rendering steel homogeneous), gypsum-f. (for calcining sulfate of lime), lamp-black-f. (for imperfect combustion of dead-oil, etc., in making lampblack), lead-f., malleable-iron f., nitric-acid f. (for salt-evaporation), slag-f. (reducing), soda-f., sulfate-f. (for making salt-cake), sugar-f. (evaporating cane-juice), wrought-iron f. (a puddling-furnace), etc.: (4) from the inventor or place of origin: as, Almain, aimond, or German f. (for separating metals from cinders), Belgian f. (for heating zinc ores to liberate the metal), Bicheroux's f. (a regenerating furnace), Castillan f. (a circular smelting-furnace for lead ores and slags), Catalan f. (for making wrought iron directly from the ore), Danks f. (a rotary puddling-furnace), Exeli f. (a cylindrical mercury condenser), Flintshire f. (reverberatory, for the simultaneous roasting and reduction of lead ore), Herreshoff's f. (a blast-furnace for copper-smelting), Mactear f. (with a revolving hearth, for making carbonate of soda), Perrot f. (steel-making), Ponsard f. (open-hearth regenerative, for steel-making), Rhenish f. (a combination of the Belgian and Silesian models), Scotch f. (a lead-smelting arrangement), Siefstroem's f. (a small but powerful blast-furnace used in chemical and metallurgical laboratories), Siemens f. (regenerating, for iron, steel, glass, etc.), Silesian zinc f. (a muffle-furnace for the manufacture of zinc), Spanish or Bolivian f. (for reducing hand-furnace), Stretefeldt f. (for reducing argentiferous ores to chlorid of silver), Wedding f. (for developing an excessive heat from a gas-flame under a forced draft); (5) from the fuel employed; as, charcoal-f., gas-f., hydrocarbon-f., petroleum-f.

fur'nage†, n. 1. The process of baking. 2. Payment for baking. 3. Feud. Law. a tax levied by an overlord for granting the right to bake in ovens not under his control.

Fur-na'ri-i'næ, 1 fûr-nā"ri-ī'nē; 2 fûr-nā"ri-ī'nē. n. pl. A subfamily of dendrocolaptoid birds having soft tail-feather; outer toe free, and tarsi lengthened: including the Southeastern American ovenbirds. [< L. furnus, oven.]—Fur-na-ri'ne, a. Ornith. Pertaining to a family of American tracheophone passerine birds with two pairs of tracheo-bronchial muscles, tarsal envelops endiaspidean, and anterior little crural feathers. Fur-na'ri-na, n. pl. [L. fem. pl.]—fur-na'ri-id, a. & n.—fur-na'ri-ine, fur-na'ri-ne, a. & n.

Furnas, 1 fûr'nas; 2 fûr'nas, n. A county in S. Nebraska; 715 sq. m.; county-seat, Beaver City.

Fur-neaux' Is'lan-ds, 1 fûr-nō'; 2 fûr-nō'. A group of islands in Bass Strait, Australasia; principal island, Great Island, 35 by 10 m.

Fur'ness, 1 fûr'nes; 2 fûr'ŧs. n. 1. Horace Howard (1*/1833–1/1912), an American lawyer; editor of Variorum Shakespeare. 2. A district in Lancashire, England; a "manorial liberty"; chief town, Barrow-in-Furness.

Fur'ness Ab'bey. Ruins between Dalton- and Barrow-in-Furness, Lancashire, England; founded by Stephen, afterward King of England, in 1127.

fur'ni-ment, n. Furniture. fur'na-ment.

fur'nish, 1 fûr'nish; 2 fûr'nish, v. 1. To equip or fit out; supply what is necessary or fitting: with with: as, to furnish the body with raiment.

So far as I am able to see, the precept 'First form the mind, then furnish it,' is an absurdity and an impossibility. The true conception is, that the mind is formed while being furnished.
W. H. PAYNE Contrib to Sci. of Education p. 73. [n. 1886.]

2. To supply for use or as a product; give a supply of; afford; yield; as, to furnish tools to workmen. 3. To provide with furniture; as, to furnish a house.

In determining the colors to be used in furnishing a room, the amount of light is an important consideration.
YOUMANS Hand-Book Household Science p. 105. [A. 1857.]

4. To place the men properly upon; supply with men; as, to furnish a backgammon-board.

Il. i. 1. In racing slang, to improve in flesh and appearance, as a horse. 2. To fit oneself out. [< OF. fourniss-, a stem of fournir, furnir, < OHG. frumjan, perform, provide, < frama, utility, profit.] fur'nish; fur'nesh; fur'ŋish. SYN.: ACCOMMODATE; EQUIP; PROVIDE.—to furnish out, to make complete provision for.—fur'nish-a-bl(e)†, a.—fur'nish-er, n. 1. One who furnishes, fits out, or provides; specif., one who furnishes a house, as one who deals in furniture: also, a gentlemen's furnisher. 2. In calico-printing, a roller that supplies the dye.—fur'nish-ment, n. 1. The act of furnishing. 2. A supply of things needed.

fur'nished, } 1 fûr'nisht; 2 fûr'nisht, pa. 1. Fitted fur'nisht*, } with what is appropriate or necessary; specif., supplied with furniture; as, furnished rooms. 2. Her. (1) Caparisoned, as a horse. (2) Armed. (3) Equipped, as a ship. 3. [Poultry Fanciers' Cant.] Well developed with respect to comb, hackle, tail, etc.: said of a cockerel.—fur'nished-ness, n.

fur'nish-ing, } 1 fûr'nish-iŋ; 2 fûr'nish-iŋ, n. 1. pl.
fur'nish-in, } Fixtures or fittings, as hardware for cabinet-work. 2. The act of providing with furniture. 3. Decoration; adornment. 4. A sum of money expended; a supply.—fur'nish-ing-goods*, n. Com. Small articles of wearing-apparel and the like: chiefly in the phrase gentlemen's furnishing-goods.

fur'ni-ture, 1 fûr'ni-chur or -tûr; 2 fûr'ni-chur or -tûr, n. 1. That with which anything is furnished or supplied; equipment or outfit; specif., household articles, especially the main movables used in the living-apartments, and made chiefly of wood, as chairs, tables, and desks; also, similar equipments of an office or public building: distinguished from furnishings.

We will consider the stock in trade, the moral and mental furniture, with which you will start upon your journey.
FREDERIC HARRISON, Education second ser., p. 317. [c. 1872].

The style, decoration, etc., of furniture have varied from time to time with changes in the popular taste, so that the furniture of every nation and epoch has its distinguishing characteristics. In Europe during the middle ages domestic furniture was a scarce luxury, what there was being of the prevailing ecclesiastical style, which attained its highest point in the decorative Gothic of the 14th century, to be superseded by the Renaissance style, a revival of Greek and Roman methods of design, which remained dominant for nearly two centuries. This in turn was superseded by the Louis-Quatorze style, named after the French king Louis XIV., its principal patron. This style aimed at novelty and ornate decoration, and is distinguished by elaborate inlaid work, incrustation of broken scroll panel-work, etc. Its great masters were Boule, Coutlier, and Riesner, whose names are still associated with the furniture of their design. Louis-Quinze was a further development of this manner, with which the Cordian and Old Colonial style in England and America were contemporary, heavy mahogany forms, under becoming more ornate after the French model. Then succeeded the work of Chippendale, also based upon the French manner, and that of Hepplewhite and Sheraton, which showed a more severely artistic taste. In the past century the styles in furniture have been largely eclectic, with occasional attempts at novelty, as in the famous Empire style of France, an attempt on the parts of a few designers to please Napoleon I.; or reversions to simplicity, as in the Morris furniture of 1865 or the modern Mission style.

2. Ornamental appendages or external adjuncts that go to complete anything. Specif.: (1) Carp. Builders' hardware, as hinges, locks, and knobs. (2) Mil. The mountings of a rifle. (3) Naut. A ship's masts and rigging; also, her tackle and apparel, including her outfit of provisions. (4) Print. Wooden or metal strips of less than type-height put around and between pages of type to make proper margins, and fit the spaces between the pages and the chase. (5) The trappings of a horse: formerly used in the plural.

This worthy churchman rode upon a well-fed ambling mule, whose furniture was highly decorated.
SCOTT Ivanhoe vol. i, p. 49. [H. M. & CO.]

fu'ro-di-az'ole, 1 fū"ro-dī-az'ōl; 2 fū"ro-dī-az'ōl, n. Chem. Same as FURAZANE.

fur'o-in, 1 fûr'o-in; 2 fûr'o-in, n. Chem. A white crystalline volatile compound, $C_{10}H_8O_4$, formed by boiling furfuraldehyde. [< FURFUR.]

fu-role', 1 fu-rōl'; 2 fu-rōl', n. St. Elmo's fire; a corposant. [OF., dim. of feu, fire, < L. focus, fireplace.] fu-rol'ŧ.

fu'ro-mon-az'ole, 1 fū"ro-mon-az'ōl; 2 fū"ro-mōn-az'ōl, n. Chem. An intramolecular anhydrid, as $CH : N \rangle O$, of β formylketone or β-diketone; isoxazol.

fur-on'ic, 1 fûr-on'ik; 2 fûr-on'ik, a. Chem. Characterizing a colorless crystalline acid ($C_5H_4O_3$), derived by oxidation from furfurpinoinic acid. [< FURFUR.]

fu'ror, } 1 fū'ror, -rôr; 2 fū'rŏr, -rōr, n. Overmasterfu'rore, } ing passion or mania for anything; rage; great excitement or enthusiasm.

MARY A. LIVERMORE Story of the War p. 252. [A. D. W. 1888.]

furr'sa-hin*, 1 fur'ə-hin"; 2 fûr'ə-hin", n. [Scot.] The off hind plow-horse, which walks on the furrows.

furred, } 1 fûrd; 2 fûrd, a. 1.
furd*, } Covered with fur, or with something resembling fur; coated; as, a furred tongue.

As with rich furred conies, their cases are far better than their bodies. Boston Acad. Medan. p. 474. [U. W. M. 1851.]

2. Carp. Provided with furring so as to form an air-space between the wall and the plastering; as, a furred wall.

Fur-reed'kote, n. Same as FARMERCOTE. Furr'old'kote.

fur'ri-er, 1 fûr'i-ər; 2 fûr'i-er, n. A dealer in or maker of fur goods; fur-dresser. [< OF. fourreor, < fourre, forre: see FUR, v.] fur'rour†.

fur'ri-er-y, 1 fûr'i-ər-i; 2 fûr'i-er-y, n. [-IES, 1 -iz; 2 -iz, pl.] 1. Furs in general. 2. The business of a furrier.

fur'ring, 1 fûr'iŋ; 2 fûr'iŋ, n. 1. Fur or fur trimmings, or the act of applying them. 2. A morbid condition of the tongue. 3. Deposit of scale in a steam-boiler; also, the process of removing this deposit. 4. Carp. (1) Flat pieces of wood to bring irregular or interrupted work to a regular or even arrangement or surface, or to produce a curve. (2) Strips of wood nailed to a solid wall, on which to lath. (3) Double planking on a ship's side. (4) pl. The pieces attached to the rafter-feet for carrying the eaves beyond the wall-line. (5) The act or process of shaping and applying furring. (6) The act or applying or adjusting any of the above. 5. The rough splintered surface of a sawn plank.

fur'row, 1 fur'o; 2 fŭr'o, n. i. 1. To plow, groove, or cut in furrows; mark with channels or wrinkles. II. v. To plow. [< AS. furan, < furh, furrow.]—fur'row-er, n.

fur'row, n. 1. A trench made in the earth by a plow; any long depression in the earth. 2. Any groove or wrinkle, as on a metal surface, on wood, or on the human face.

His face bore the marks of former storms, but present fair weather; its furrows had been worn into an habitual smile.
LAURENCE Stocks-and-Stones p. 407. [D. & CO. 1861.]

3. Biol. Specif., a longitudinal shallow groove in a surface or part, as in the stem of Equisetum, or, as in embryos, indicating the place of developing parts. 4. Agric. A furlong. [MDE. furwe, < AS. furh; cp. L. porca, ridge between two furrows.] —fur'ŧ-ful-ness, n. —f.-ŧ, Agric. To turn one furrow back upon the preceding one, leaving a trench at each side.—dead furrow, a double furrow made by throwing two furrow-slices in opposite directions from a given line.—flat f., a furrow thrown flat, as the first one turned.—fur'row-drain*, n. To drain (land) by means of open furrows.—f.-faced, a. Having a face or surface marked or crossed by furrows.—f.-slice, n. The strip of sod or earth thrown from a furrow by the plow.—f.-weed, n. A weed growing on plowed ground.—f.-wheel, n. A small wheel supporting the front of a plow.—glutеal f., the deep groove between the nates.—intervenтricular f., a longitudinal depression on each side of the surface of the heart marking the partition between the ventricles.—lap f., a plowed furrow which leans upon the preceding one.—lunoid f. (Geol.), a glacial trough.—neck-f., n. The hindmost of the transverse furrows of a trilobite's glabella. nuchal f.†.—to draw a straight f., to lead a correct life; live virtuously.—

furze'cat", n. [Prov. Eng.] The whinchat. f.-chick'; f.-chitter'; f.-hacker,—f.-lecker, n. [Local, Eng.] The brambling. f.-chucker.— f.-lark, n. [Prov. Eng.] The meadow-pipit.— f.-linnet, n. [Local, Eng.] The common linnet.— f.-owl, n. A cockehafer.— f.-pig, n. A hedgehog.— f.-prick, n. [Local, Eng.] The Dartford warbler (Melizophilus undatus).— f.-tit'lin-gale, n. [Austral.], an evergreen shrub (Hakea ulicina) of the family Proteaceæ.— furzed, a. Furzy.— furz'ery, n. Land pertaining to or having furze.— furz'er-y, n. Furze in general; a group of furze-bushes.

furz'y, a. Covered with furze.

fus'ain', ↓ 1 fiū'sāñ'; 2 fū-sāñ', n. A crayon of fine charcoal, or a drawing made with it. [F., spindle-tree, < L. fusus, spindle.]

fus'an, ↓ 1 fiū'sēn'; 2 fu-siñ', n. One of the treaty ports of Fu-sa'ri-um, 1 fiū-sā'ri-um; 2 fū-sā'ri-ŭm, n. Bot. A genus of fungi containing saprophytic as well as parasitic species. Several are known to occasion serious injury to crops, among the cotton-plant, orange- and lemon-trees, the tomato, and other cultivated vegetables. [< L. fusus.]— fu-sa'ri-al, a.

fus'ate, 1 fiū'sēt; 2 fiū'sĕt, n. Arch. An astragal. [< F. fusarole, < It. fusajuola, < fuso, spindle, < L. fusus.]

fu'sa-rol†,

fu'sate, 1 fiū'sēt; 2 fiū'sĕt, a. Same as FUSIFORM.

Fus-ber'ia, 1 fus-ber'i-a; 2 fus-bĕr'i-a, n. In Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, the sword of Rinaldo.

fuse, 1 fiūz; 2 fiūz, a. [Rare.] Tawny; fuscous.

fu'schang, 1 fū'shan; 2 fū'shaṅ, n. [Scot.] A loose heap or fus'cin, 1 fus'in; 2 fŭs'in, n. Chem. A dark-colored compound obtained from various animal oils when they are decomposed by heat; specif., the brown pigment derived from the retinal epithelium. Also fuscine.

fus'co-, 1 fus'ko-; 2 fŭs'co-. A combining form. See FUSC.— fuscocobaltic chlorid (Chem.), a complex cobalt salt ($CoS_2NH_3Cl_4(OH)_2.2H_2O$).— fus"co-fer-ru'gi-nous, a. Entom. Brownish reddish-brown.— fus"co-fla'vous, a. Dimly transparent: applied to wings of insects.— fus"co-pi'ceous, a. Blackish; dark-gray.— fus"co-pun'cate, a. Entom. Dotted with dots, as an insect's wing.— fus"co-tes-ta'ceous, a. Entom. Dull reddish-brown.

fus'cous, 1 fus'kus; 2 fŭs'cŭs, a. 1. Grayish-brown or tawny. 2. Of a dark hue; dusky. [< L. fuscus, dusky.]

fuse, 1 fiūz; 2 fiūz, vt. To melt or fuse; reduce to a liquid; the like. BURKE Essays p. 91. (CAS. CO. 1887.]

fuse'-vi'o-la'ceous, a. Dark-violet or purple.

fuse'y, 1 fiūz; 2 fiū, n. Same as FEWSTER. t. t. 1. To fuze', ↓ liquefy (a solid) by heat; melt; make fluid. 2. To unite or blend as by melting together.

Railroads and steam vessels . . . have gone far to fuse into one homogeneous body the different elements in each nation. BRYCE in Contemp. Rev. Jan., 1891, p. 19.

II. i. 1. To become fluid by heat; melt.

2. To combine or blend, as if melted together; as, the two parties fused in one. [< L. fusus, pp. of fundo, pour.]

—fus'ing-disk', n. A thin, toothless metal disk, which, when rotated at high speed, can cut through and thin by rubbing it hard through the metal.— f.-point, n. The temperature at which a substance fuses or liquefies.

fuse', n. To equip with a fuse, as a projectile.

fuse, 1 fiūz; 2 fiūz, n. A tube filled with a combustible compound, or a cord or tape saturated with such a compound, usually slow-burning, and intended to convey fire to an explosive or combustible mass slowly or without danger; also, the apparatus for lighting it; also, any device performing practically the same functions. See illus. under CONCUSSION-FUSE.

Fuses are named (1) from their mode of use; as, concussion-fuse, detonating f., electric f., friction-f., percussion-f., time-f. (requiring time for its action, as distinguished from one that acts instantaneously, as by percussion); (2) from their materials; as, tape f., wooden f.; (3) from the purpose for which used; as, blasting-f., bomb-f.; (4) from their position; as, base f., point f. (used for exploding projectiles).

—A safety-piece of fusible metal in an electric circuit, that melts when the current is too strong. See FUSE-WIRE. [Abbr. of FUSEE.]

—Abel fuse, a fuse to be ignited by electricity: composed of potassium chlorate and a copper salt: invented by Sir Frederick A.bel.— Bickford f., a blasting-fuse, consisting of a long cylindrical mass of explosive substance, so enclosed in a varnished wrapping of fiber as to burn at a regular rate.— chemical f., a fuse ignited by chemical action.— combination f., a military shell-fuse having in its case both a time-fuse and a concussion-fuse.— common f., same as BICKFORD FUSE.— electric f., a device for electrically igniting a charge.— fuse'-au'ger, n. An instrument for regulating the time of burning of a fuse by removing a certain portion of the composition. It has a movable graduated scale, which regulates the depth to which the auger should penetrate.— f.-extractor, n. An implement for extracting wooden fuses from shells.— f.-gage, n. An instrument for cutting time-fuses to length.— f.-hook, n. The hole in a shell for the reception of a fuse.— f.-link, n. Same as FUSE-WIRE.— f.-lock, n. A friction-lock by which a miner may fire the free end of a blasting-fuse by a lanyard, or a similar means of igniting it by an electric spark.— f.-mallet, n. A mallet used in connection with a fuse-setter in fixing a wooden fuse into a shell.— f.-plug, n. The plug or case that holds the fuse of a shell.— f.-punch, n. A punch or drift used in connection with a fuse-mallet in setting or fixing a fuse in a shell.— f.-wheel, n. Same as FUSEE², 1.— f.-wire, n. A short piece of wire, made of an alloy of less current-carrying capacity than the remainder of the circuit, that melts at a low temperature, and thus opens the circuit in the event of an excessive current: used in electrical circuits to protect instruments, etc., from too strong currents.— f.-wrench, n. A T-shaped wrench used in fixing a fuse-plug in a shell.— magazine f. (Elec.), an arrangement which protects an electric circuit from excessive currents, and in which a fresh fuse automatically replaces one that has melted.— safety-f., n. A fuse-wire.

fuse'au, 1 fiu-zō'; 2 fū-zō', n. [P.] The spindle-shaped grip of a sword-handle.

fu-see', 1 fiu-zē'; 2 fū-zē', n. 1. A match made of cardboard soaked in niter and tipped with the same substance as the ordinary friction-match. 2. A wooden match having a comparatively large bulb of inflammable material at its end, tipped with a friction igniter, and not extinguishable by wind: used for lighting pipes and cigars in the open air. 3. A flare used as a railroad night signal. 4. A fuse.

My train is laid, and waiting for the fusee. Wisdom While You Wait p. 128. [e. a. r. 1862.]

fu-see', n. 1. Horol. A spirally grooved cone, as in a watch or a spring-clock, about which is wrapped a chain or cord, which is also wound about a cylindrical barrel containing or driven by a spiral spring. Its use is to give the spring increasing leverage as its power lessens by unwinding. Now largely superseded by the isochronous balance. See WATCH. 2. A sort of splint on a horse's leg. 3†. A fusiform figure. [OF., thread, < LL. fusata, spindleful, < fusa, use a spindle, < L. fusus, spindle.] — fu-see'-ma-chine", n. A machine for manufacturing fusees.— f.-windlass, n. A pump-windlass having a conical barrel.

fu-see-lage, 1 fiū'si-lāj; 2 fū'se-laj', n. The framework of an airplane; so called from its spindle-like shape.

fu'se-li, 1 fiū'se-li; 2 fū'se-li, John Henry (?1742–?1825). A Swiss scholar and painter, became an English R. A.; Francesca da Rimini, etc.

fu'sel-oil", 1 fiū'zel-oil"; 2 fū'zĕl-ōil", n. Chem. 1. A volatile poisonous oily compound, consisting largely of amyl alcohol, and having a disagreeable taste, obtained when corn- or grain-spirits are rectified. Antidote: strong coffee. See OIL. 2. G

Gg Roman. Gg Black Letter. Gg Script.

G, g, gee, 1 jī; 2 ġē, n. [GEES, G's, or Gs, 1 jīz; 2 ġēş, pl.] 1. A letter: the seventh in the English, Latin, and Romanic alphabets. Its Latin name, still used by the Germans, was gay, which shows its original sound. This sound, popularly called 'hard' g and technically described as a voiced guttural mute, is made by bringing the back surface of the tongue into close contact with the opposite part of the soft palate, the vocal cords being tense and vibrant. Unvoiced, i. e., without the vibration, the sound becomes k. The point of contact for g varies with the character of the following vowel, being farther back in go than in geese. If the closure is imperfect (without the final click) the result is a guttural spirant not heard in standard English, but common in German and other languages. Uttered with the nasal passage open g becomes the guttural nasal ng (as in sing), which is not a compound of n and g.

Before n and m, g is sometimes silent, as in sign, phlegm. Double g is pronounced like single g, as in dagger, save where the first g results from assimilation, as in suggest.

What is called 'soft' g (the sound heard in the English name of the letter) is a composite consonant consisting of a variety of d combined with a variety of z, as in azure. Phoneticians denote it by dzh or dz. In the ordinary spelling this sound is denoted by j, as in jet; by g before e, i, and y, as in gem, gist, gypsy; by ge final, as in age, siege, adage; and by dg(e), as in judge, judg(e)ment. This sound usually derives from an earlier guttural (g), which, being followed by a high vowel or semivowel (y), became first palatal and then supradental, by the moving forward of the point of contact (see under C).

When the old name gē had become jī, and the feeling had taken root that g ought to be 'soft' before e, i, and y, a tendency set in to use gh or gu for the old 'hard' sound, but the idea was never fully carried out: gessen and gest became guess and ghost, but geten and goos kept the simple g. The most of these alien gh's and gu's have been discarded for simple g, but a few still remain. Where gh is of old Germanic origin it represents a guttural spirant, which either became silent, as in though and brought, or was labialized, as in laugh.

g and ng each stand for .79 of one per cent. of the sounds on the pages of English literature, and are the 31st, 32d in frequency: soft g = j sounds average .47. WHITNEY Oriental and Linguistic Studies second series, p. 297 (a. 1874).

Capital G is from Latin C, a rounding of Greek Γ, gamma (7th cent. B.C.). Latin C represented the sounds of both g and k till the 3d century B. C., when a slight modification of the character G (i. e., G) was made for the g sound. For the further history of the character, see C. 2. An abbreviation: (1) [G] George; Grace; etc. (other personal names beginning with G). (2) [G] Groundeswell; [g] gloomy weather: employed in nautical log-books. For other abbreviations, see below. 3. A symbol, noting: (1) Mus. (a) One of a series of tones, at intervals of an octave, given, in modern International or French pitch, by about 783 vibrations a second or by 783 multiplied or divided by any power of 2; the fifth tone in the scale of C major. See SCALE; PITCH. (b) The key having this tone for a key-note. See KEY. (c) On a keyed instrument, any key giving this tone. See KEYBOARD. (d) In written music, any note representing this tone. See STAFF. (e) In the fixed system of solmization, the fifth tone in the scale of C major. (f) In Greek music, the final tone of the Mixolydian mode. (2) [g] Physics. The rate of acceleration of gravity; about 32 feet a second. (3) [Rare.] Chem. Glucinum: now usually Gl. (4) A Roman numeral, 400; with a dash over it (Ḡ), 400,000. G

Gg Roman. Gg Black Letter. Gg Script.

G, g, gee, 1 ji; 2 gē, n. [GEES, G's, or Gs, 1 jiz; 2 gēs, pl.] 1. A letter: the seventh in the English, Latin, and Romanic alphabets. Its Latin name, still used by the Germans, was gay, which shows its original sound. This sound, popularly called 'hard' g and technically described as a voiced guttural mute, is made by bringing the back surface of the tongue into close contact with the opposite part of the soft palate, the vocal cords being tense and vibrant. Unvoiced, i. e., without the vibration, the sound becomes k. The point of contact for g varies with the character of the following vowel, being farther back in go than in geese. If the closure is imperfect (without the final click) the result is a guttural spirant not found in standard English, but common in German and other languages. Uttered with the nasal passage open g becomes the guttural nasal ng (as in sing), which is not a compound of n and g.

Before n and m, g is sometimes silent, as in sign, phlegm. Double g is pronounced like single g, as in dagger, save where the first g results from assimilation, as in suggest.

What is called 'soft' g (the sound heard in the English name of the letter) is a composite consonant consisting of a variety of d combined with a variety of the z in azure. Phoneticians denote it by *dž*ı or dʒ. In the ordinary spelling this sound is represented by j or ge, final, as in age, aisle, adage; and by dg(e), as in judge, judg(e)ment. This sound usually derives from an earlier guttural (g), which, being followed by a high vowel or semivowel (y), became first palatal and then supradental, by the moving forward of the point of contact (see under C).

When the old name gē had become jī, and the feeling had taken root that g ought to be 'soft' before e, i, and y, a tendency set in to use gh or gu for the old 'hard' sound, but the idea was never fully carried out: geesen and goet became guess and ghost, but gate and goos kept the simple g. The most of these alien gh's and gu's have been discarded for simple g, but a few still remain. Where gh is of old Germanic origin it represents a guttural spirant, which either became silent, as in though and brought, or was labialized, as in laugh.

g and ng each average .79 of one per cent. of the sounds on the pages of English literature, and each 31st, 324d in frequency: soft g = j sounds average .47. WHITNEY Oriental and Linguistic Studies second series, p. 274. [8. 1874.]

Capital G is from Latin C, a rounding of Greek Γ, gamma (7th cent. B.C.). Latin C represented the sounds of both g and k till the 3d century B. C., when a slight modification of the character C (i. e., G) was made for the g sound. For the further history of the character, see C. 2. As abbreviation: (1) [G] George; Genius etc. (other personal names beginning with G). S. history, a rule of the House of Representatives, in force 1838-45, which provided that antislavery bills and petitions should be tabled "without debate, without printing, without reference"; introduced as a resolution by Charles G. Atherton of New Hampshire, hence known as "the Atherton gag."— gag-rein, n. A rein passing through a gag-curb and pulling the bit upward and backward.— gag-resolution, n. Law. A resolution by a legislative body prohibiting some contemplated action. 2. U. S. Hist. See GAG-LAW.— gag-runner, n. A loop hanging from the throat-latch of a bridle and forming a throat-lash.— gag-strap, n. A strap or chain used as a horse's curb.

gage¹,]] gēj; 2 gāj, n. [AGGER and GAUGE; GAG'ING or gauge,] GAU'ING.] 1. To determine by measurement or other test the contents, dimensions, quantity, capacity, or power of; measure; test; as, to gage a cask; to gage the velocity of wind; to gage the height of a mountain. 2. To note or measure the mental or moral qualities, capacity, force, or behavior of; estimate; appraise; as, he gages men accurately.

The character of a man's teaching or preaching may be gauged more fairly by his emphasis than by his words. H. C. TRUMBULL in Sunday School Times [Phila.] Nov. 7, 1891, p.·705, col. 3.

3. To gather with thread, as a fabric, in uniform pockets. 4. To cut or rub bricks or stones so accurately that they become uniform in size. 5. To cause (plaster, etc.) to dry quickly or slowly by mixing in the right proportions; also, to add a definite quantity of plaster of Paris (to mortar) to make it set quickly. [< OF. gauger, measure; perhaps allied with GALLON, or < LL. qualificō; see QUALIFY.]

gage¹, vt. [GAGED; GAG'ING.] 1. [Archaic.] To give as a pledge or security for some act; pawn; wager; stake.

A guide sent to them by the headman of this place gaged his life as a forfeit. G. W. COX Gen. Hist. Greece p. 510. [n. 1876.]

Gage not thy promise . . . lightly.
SCOTT Ivanhoe p. 363. [BL. 1891.]

2. To bind or secure by a pledge. [< F. guyer, OF. wayier; see WAGE, v.] gage¹,] n. 1. An instrument for measuring, indicating, gauge,] or regulating the capacity, quantity, dimensions, power, amount, proportions, etc., of anything; hence, a standard of comparison; as the gage of the boiler; and, figuratively, as, the gage of his genius. See list below. Gages for mechanical work that is interchangeable are made in pairs and are constructed within limits above and below standard size, being known as low and high, or inside and outside gages. 2. A standard measurement, dimension, quantity, or amount. (1) The distance between rails or between wheel-treads, as in a railway. See BROAD-GAGE and NARROW-GAGE. (2) The exposed length of a tile, slate, or shingle. (3) The amount of gypsum added to lime plaster to hasten its setting. (4) The composition of pieces of Portland cement used in making certain mouldings, decorations, etc. (5) The fineness of a textile or netted fabric, as lace. (6) The diameter of the bore of a gun. (7) A material by which the capacity of, or amount of anything is measured. 3. Gas for measuring. 4. Gage for ascertaining. 5. Naut. (1) The position of a vessel with regard to the wind and to another vessel. When to windward of another vessel, a ship is said to have the weather gage; when to leeward, the lee gage. 4. [Cant.] (1) A quart pot. (2) A pipeful of tobacco. [< OF. gauge, < gauger; see GAUGE, GAUGE, v.] American gage, see WIRE-GAGE, under WIRE.— differential g., a gage for testing the difference in diameter between two pieces that are to have a shrink fit or a drive fit.— flat g., a male gage for testing wire-gage notches.— fog g., g.-chat, n. An adjuster for regulating the depth of the cut in sawing lumber.— g.-block, n. An iron adjuster used in marble-cutting to affix and regulate the saws.— g.-box, n. A box in which shingles are laid to facilitate counting and benching.— g.-brick, n. A wedged-shaped brick.— g.-cock, n. A stop-cock screwed into a receptacle, as a boiler, to indicate the height of the liquid therein.— g.-concussion, n. The striking of the flanges of railway-car wheels against the rails, due to lateral vibration.— g.-door, n. A wooden door in a mine-passage, to regulate ventilation.— g.-field, n. Astron. A restricted area of the heavens photographed so as to gage the number or density of the stars therein observed.— g.-glass, n. A strong vertical or nearly vertical glass tube connected at its ends with the inside of a steam-boiler, showing the water-level.— g.-knife, n. A knife whose cut is regulated by a gage.— g.-ladder, n. A herringbone to support planks for scaffolding, etc., in excavating.— g.-lath, n. Building. Any lath placed to support a slate, tile, etc.— g.-lathe, n. A lathe for producing articles of a given size and shape.— g.-notch, n. Engin. A testing notch of standard size in a weir-board by which the flow of a stream is measured.— g.-penny†, n. A gager's fee.— g.-pin, n. A pin for use on the planet of a printing-press to hold the sheet in proper position.— g.-punch, n. A device used on cutting-or punching-machinery, to insure uniformity in size, of pieces cut, or in position, of holes punched.— g.-plug, n. The excess of the trackgage over the wheel-gage in a railway.— g.-point, n. The diameter of a cylinder one inch high and containing a standard unit of volume; used in cask-measurements.— g.-rod, n. A graduated rod used in determining the capacity of casks, etc.— g.-saw, n. A saw fitted with a gage by which the depth of cut is regulated.— g.-stuff, n. A plaster containing gypsum: used for mouldings, etc. gaged stuff.— g.-tube, n. The connecting tube between a gage and the vessel containing that which is to be measured.— g.-weir, n. A weir composed of movable wickets by the adjustment of which the height of water above it can be regulated.— g.-wheel, n. A wheel attached to a plowbeam to regulate the depth of the furrow.— standard g. A standard of capacity.— standard g. 1. A gage for determining whether tools, etc., are of a recognized standard size, or a size that is standard. 2. [U. S.] Railroad. A track-width of 56½ inches.

PARTIAL LIST OF GAGES.

Gages are named (1) from the thing measured or gaged; as, air-gage (for pressure in a closed vessel), angle-gage, axle-g. (for setting the spindle at the proper angle with the axle), barrel-g. (for gun-bores; also, a barrel-filling gage), boiler-plate g. (for measuring the thickness of sheet metal), butter-g., cathetometer-g. (a device graduated to show the diameter by a measure of the circumference of a cylinder or a cylindrical article such as rope, etc.), clapboard-g. (for the clapboards accurately), current-g. (for measuring the velocity of currents), depth-g. (for measuring the depth of bored holes), flame-g. (for measuring the light-giving part of a flame by adapting its image upon a screen), fog-g. (for measuring the density of a fog), grain-g. (for weighing a standard measure of grain), hydrometer-g. (for measuring specific gravity), miter-g., page-g. (for gaging the length of pages of type), plate-g. (for measuring the thickness of metal plates), pressure-g. (for steam, air, water, gas, etc.), salt-g. (a salinometer), sheet-metal g. (for thickness), shot-g. (for round shot), shrinkage-g. (for driving-wheel tires, etc.; also, a pattern-makers' gage having arbitrary graduations), sirup-g., spectacle-g. (for the lenses in spectacles or spectacle-lenses), speed-g., spoke-g. (for testing the set of spokes in a hub), steam-g., string-g. (for diameter of planoconvex lenses, etc), tide-g. (for gaging air-pressure in a pneumatic tire), tool-g. (for testing the angularity of the cutting surface of a lathe-tool), vacuum-g., wave-g., wire-g. (for the diameter), zero-g. (2) from their mechanism or arrangement; as, combination g. (for showing two different kinds of measures such as both temperature and pressure), compound g. (a combination gage indicating more than two measures), cylinder g. (a cylinder for sizing gun-bores or other round openings), decimal g. (marked in decimals of an inch), female g. (for measuring inside or male diameters), float-g. (for testing the level of a liquid), hook g. (for measuring the height of liquids, and consisting of a vernier scale with a hook attached to it, fine adjustment being obtained to touch the surface of the liquid from the under side thereby avoiding errors due to capillary action), index-g. (having a dial), internal g. (for making internal measurements), male g. (for measuring inside or female diameters), mercurial g. (employing a column of mercury), plug g. (a plug for measuring the diameter of bored holes), recording g. (a self-recording gage), stepped g. (a male gage of constantly increasing diameters), thermometer-g. (for indicating steam-pressure by temperature), (3) by certain trades; as, carpenters' or joiners' g. (a scribing-gage), glass-cutters' g. (a scratching-gage), marking-g. (a scribing-gage), marking-g. (for marking a line parallel to an edge or to another line), rip-g. (for guiding a saw in ripping), scribing-g. (a gage having a scribing-point for marking its measurements), shingling-g. (for laying shingles accurately), stitching-g. (for basting in stitching), test-g. or testing g., tucking-g. (for tucks, as in garments), weighing-g. (for showing weight of rainfall or snowfall in a given time); (4) from the inventor, manufacturer, or owner; Bourdon g. (for the measurement of fluid pressure based on the principle that increase of pressure in a fluid contained in a curved tube tends to straighten it), Casella g. (for determining low pressures of gas by compressing a given volume of the gas and measuring its new pressure and volume, when by Mariotte's or Boyle's law the original pressure may be calculated; Rodman's pressure-g. (for determining pressure by the depth to which a steel knife is forced into copper now superseded); (5) from their appearance; bird's-eye g. (a gage; grasshopper g. (a carpenter's gage having a long fence with one round and one flat face, adapted to mark a line parallel to a concave edge or over a projection).

gage², n. That which is given or deposited as security for some act; a pledge; pawn.

Representative pledges are assurances or gages given by a candidate, respecting his future course as a representative, should he be elected.
F. LIEBER Political Ethics vol. ii, p. 264. [c. 1850.]

2. Anything, as a gauntlet, pocket-glove, etc., as a invitation to combat and to be accepted by the party challenged; hence, a challenge in general; defiance.

'The kings threaten us,' said Danton; ' we hurl at their feet as gage of battle the head of a king.'
R. MACKENSIE Nineteenth Century p. 28. [tr. n. 1889.]

[< OF. gage, wage; see WAGE, n.]— in gage, in pledge or pawn: as security.

gage³, n. One of several varieties of plum; as, the green gage; golden gage. [< Sir William Gage, 1725.]

Gage, n. 1. Lyman Judson (⁵/₁₁1836–), an American banker, Secretary of the Treasury, 1897–1902. 2. gage'a-ble-ness, n. Capable of being gaged, as by measuring.

gaged,]] gējd; 2 gājd, pa. 1. Measured or fitted by gauged,) or as by a gage. 2. Properly proportioned or compounded: said of plasterers' mortar-composition. 3. Gathered; tucked or puckered.— gaged work (Building), bricks carefully prepared and cemented together, the edges being jointed with putty.

gage d'a'mour',] gēj dᵘ-mûr'; 2 gāzh dᵘ-mur'. [F.] A pledge of love; love-token.

ga-gee',] gē-ji'; 2 gā-gē'. n. Law & Hist. The recipient of a gage or pledge.

gage'like', a. Resembling a gage.

gage'-notch', g.-play, etc. See under GAGE¹, n.

gag'er,]] gē'jer; 2 gāj'er, n. One who gages; specif., gaug'er,) a person officially appointed in the revenue service to measure the contents of casks, etc.— gag'er-ship, n. The office or position of a gager.

Gages,] gāzh; 2 ĝāzh, Jean B. D., Count de (²/₁₁1682–⁵/₁₁1753). A Spanish general who defeated the Austrians at Campo Santo, Feb., 1743.

gagget, v. & n. Same as GAG.

gag'ger,] gag'er; 2 gāg'er, n. 1. One who gags. 2. A piece of iron used to keep a core in its place in a mold; a chaplet.

gag'ger-y,] gag'er-i; 2 gāg'er-y, n. Hoaxing; deception.

gag'gle,]] gag'l; 2 gāg'l, vi. [GAGGLED, GAG'GLING; GAG'GLING.] gag'le,] 1. To utter the cackle of the goose; gabble. 2. [Prov. Eng.] To laugh or talk in a gaggling way. [A freq. word of imitative orig.; cp. GAG, v.] gag'let.

gag'gle, n. A flock of wild geese; a noisy or chattering company.

gag'gler,] gag'ler; 2 gāg'ler, n. One that gaggles; a goose.

gag'ling,] gag'ling; 2 gāg'ling, n. 1. The act of measuring. 2. [Prov. Eng.] A young goose. 3. A small bank of slack or other rubbish at the mouth of a mine-heading, to fence it off. 3. Gypsum, used in plaster to cause it to set. 4. The addition of gypsum to plaster. gaug'ling.

gag'ling-scal'lop-per, n. A combining cutter with a graduated scratch-gage.— g.-sline, n. The graduated scale on the rod or rule employed in determining the capacity of barrels, etc.— g. stuff, n. Same as GAGE-STUFF.

gag'-law', gag'-rein, etc. See under GAG¹, n.

gag'root',] gag'rōōt'; 2 gag'rōōt', n. Indian tobacco (Lobelia inflata), a strong emetic and poison.

gag'-run'ner, gag-strap. See under GAG¹, n.

gag'-tooth'y, n. A toothed projects.— gag'-toothed'†, a.

Ga'ham,] gē'ham; 2 gā'ham, n. Bib. Gen. xxii, 24.

Ga'har,] gē'här; 2 gā'här, n. Bib. Ezra ii, 47.

Ga'har-a,] gē'här-ə; 2 gā'här-ə, n. Bib. Same as gah'er-la:.

[< OF. galoper, for waloper, < OLD FL. walop, gallop, < walden, holt, + -op, perhaps = UP.] gal'lup†; gal'op†.

gal'lop, n. 1. The fastest and most rapid gait of the progressive quadrupedal motion (sometimes erroneously called the run), in which the animal springs into the air from a fore foot and lands upon the diagonal hind foot.

If the notation of a gallop is required, the gallop begins with the landing of a hind foot upon the ground, as, for example, the left hind foot, the right hind will next strike the ground and at a little distance before it, and then follow in succession the left fore foot and the right fore foot, at a distance from each other sometimes equal to the height of the animal, the transverse line of the foundations of support (beginning the notation as above) are: (1) the left hind foot; (2) both hind feet; (3) the right hind foot; (4) the right hind and left fore feet; (5) the left fore foot; (6) both fore feet; (7) the right fore foot, from which the animal will spring into the air. In this last phase (the only one of the gallop when the animal is entirely off the ground) all the legs are flexed under the body, the left fore foot to strike the ground will be the hind foot diagonal to that from which the spring was effected. See MOVEMENT for illustration of movements of the gallop.

The gallop . . . has in all ages been employed by artists to convey the impression of great speed, although, curiously enough, the phase in which the horse has been almost invariably depicted is one which is impracticable during uniform progressive motion.
EDWARD MUYBRIDGE Science of Animal Locomotion p. 11. [n. y. or. BRIT.]

2. The act of riding, or a ride at a gallop; as, we had a gallop through the field. 3. same as GALLOP, 1. ga-lore', 1 ga-lōr'; 2 ga-lōr', a. Very many; abundant: used always after the noun; as, apples and nuts galore. [< Ir. guleor; go, particle prefixed to adj. to form adv., leor, enough.]

ga-lore', n. [Rare.] Abundance.

WHITWOOP Edwin Brotherton's pt. 1, p. 54. [R. & P. 1862.]

ga-lore', adv. In abundance.

ga-losh', 1 ga-losh'; 2 ga-lŏsh', n. To cover or edge with strong or water-proof material, as a shoe. [C.]

ga-losh', 1 ga-losh'; 2 ga-lŏsh' (XIII), n. 1. A wooden sole or pattern fastened with latchets: worn in the middle ages over the shoes. 2. [Eng.] Hence, any overshoe. 3. A legging or high gaiter. [< F. galoche, < LL. calopedia, < Gr. kalopedion, < kalon, wood (< kalō, burn), + pous, foot.] ga-loche†.

Gal-phim'i-a, 1 gal-fim'i-a; 2 găl-fim'i-a, n. Bot. A small genus of tropical and subtropical American evergreen shrubs of the polypetalous family Malpighiaceæ, with small opposite leaves and terminal racemes of yellow or reddish flowers. Several species are in ornamental cultivation. [Anagram of MALPIGHIA.]

gal'pen, 1 gal'pĕn; 2 găl-pĕn', n. [S. Am.] A building on a farm for the use of laborers.

galt', 1 gŏlt; 2 gălt, n. 1. Geol. Clay-beds between the Upper and Lower English Greensand. See table under GEOLOGY. 2. [Prov. Eng.] Firm and compact clay; brick-clay. [< Norw. gald hard earth.] — galt'y, a.

Galt², n. [Prov. Eng.] A bear pig.

Galt, n. Sir Alexander Tilloch (?/₄1817–?/₁₀1893), a Canadian statesman and author; son of John; Minister of Finance and High Commissioner. 2. John (?/₄1779–?/₁₀ 1839), a Scottish novelist; author of Annals of the Parish, etc. He founded the town in Waterloo S. district, Ontario province, Canada.

Gal'ton, 1 gal'tŏn; 2 găl'tŏn, Sir Francis (?/₁₀1822–?/₁₀1911). An English traveler, anthropologist, and statistician proposed by Galton to account for ancestral inheritance, which assigned to the parents one-fourth each, to the grandparents one-fourth of one-fourth, or one-sixteenth each, and so on.— Galton's formula, a formula from which the natality can be estimated by subtracting the combined age of the parents from the constant 91¼.— Galton's method, a speedy and satisfactory method of collecting material for scientific research by distributing tables of questions among a number of persons and comparing the answers to determine the problem under investigation: the method of the questionary.— Galton's weights (Psychophys.), a set of brass weights used in experiments for establishing Weber's law.— Galton's whistle, a whistle capable of giving a very high note used in experiments for determining the highest audible pitch.

Gal-to'ni-a, 1 gal-tō'ni-a; 2 gal-tō'ni-a, n. Bot. A small genus of bulbous herbs, the summer hyacinths. They belong to the lily family and have tunicated bulbs and drooping bell-shaped fragrant flowers on tall leafless scapes. [< Prof. Francis Galton.]

gal'tropt, n. Her. Same as CALTROP.

ga'lu'chat', 1 ga'lū'shă'; 2 gă'lū'chă', n. [F.] Chagreen made into an ornamental leather.

Galvani-graph, n. [< GALVANI, pt. To proceed joyfully and exultantly: a telescope-word invented by Lewis Carroll, combining "gallop" and "triumph."

He left it dead, and with its head
LEWIS CARROLL Through the Looking Glass i. 22. [MACM. 1872.]

ga-lun'cha, 1 ga-lun'cha; 2 ga-lun'cha, n. [Hind.] An exchange of compliments. gal'un-ga. A diuretic property, from two East-Indian plants (Tinospora cordifolia and T. crispa) of the moonseed family (Menispermaceæ); also, applied to the plants themselves.

ga'luth, 1 gā'luth; 2 gā'luth, n. [Heb.] Exile; used in accounts of the exile of the Jews from the Holy Land. go'lust.

galv., abbr. Galvanic; galvanism.

Gal'va, 1 gal'vo; 2 găl'va, n. A town in Henry county, Ill.

Gal-va'ni, 1 gal-vē'ni; 2 găl-vā'ni, Luigi (?/₂1737–¹²/₂1798). An Italian physiologist and physicist, who discovered galvanism.

gal-van'ic, 1 gal-van'ik; 2 găl-văn'ic, a. 1. Of or pertaining or relating to galvanism, or electricity produced by chemical action; voltaic.

The term Galvanic fluid is justly applied to animal electricity, which Galvani was the first to discover.
SIR H. DAVY Elements of Chem. Phil. p. 684. p. 571. [BL. & CO.]

2. Resembling the movements of a limb of a dead animal subjected to an electric current; spasmodic; unreal; as, a galvanic movement. [< Galvani, of Bologna.] gal-va'ni-form.— galvanic pile, a pile of disks of two metals, one more oxidizable than the other, placed alternately, and having between them paper moistened with acids: used by Volta in his electric experiments.— gal-van'i-ted, a.

gal'va-nism, 1 gal'va-nizm; 2 găl'va-nĭşm, n. 1. Current electricity, especially that arising from chemical action, as distinguished from that generated by heat or induction; a name for voltaic electricity. 2. The branch of electric science that treats of such currents. 3. Med. The application of a continuous electric current from voltaic cells, as distinguished from faradism and franklinism. [< F. galvanisme, < Galvani, professor of anatomy at Bologna.] — gal'va-nist, n. One proficient in galvanism.— gal"va-nis'ti-cal, a.

gal"va-ni-za'tion, n. 1. The process of covering with a metallic coating by a galvanic process; electroplating. 2. The act of treating with or the state of being physically affected by a voltaic current. gal"va-ni-sa'tion†.

gal'va-nize, 1 gal'va-naiz; 2 găl'va-nīz, vt. [-NIZED; -NIZING.] 1. To treat with a continuous voltaic electric current, as from a galvanic battery: specif., to use voltaic electricity for restoring the consciousness or exciting the muscular action of, as a corpse.

You may galvanize the nerve of a corpse till the action of a limb startles the spectator with the appearance of life.
ROBERTSON Sermons third series, ser. ix, p. 513. [M. 1870.]

2. Hence, to imbue with factitious life or animation; as, to galvanize a forgotten issue. 3. To coat with metal by the galvanic process; electroplate.— galvanized iron, iron coated with tin by galvanic process and then immersed in a zinc-bath: frequently but almost always the sheets are coated with zinc by immersion in a molten bath of that metal, without galvanization.— gal'va-niz"er, gal'va-nis"er, n.

gal"va-no-, 1 gal'va-no-; 2 găl'va-no-. Derived from the name Galvani: a combining form.— gal"va-no-cau'ter-y, n. Pertaining to the heat caused by an electric current employed in cauterization.— gal"va-no-cau"ter-i-za'tion, n. The operation or result of cauterizing by electricity. gal"va-no-cau'ter-y‡.— gal"va-no-chem'i-cal, a. Noting the chemical effect of a galvanic current.— gal"va-no-cu"rent-tilt-y, n. Physiol. Muscular contractility caused by stimulus of the galvanic current.— gal-van'o-glyph, n. A relief printing-surface produced by electrotyping from an etched copper or zinc plate; also, a picture printed from such a plate.— gal-va'no-gal'va-nom'e-ter, n. The art or process of making galvanoglyphs. See GLYPHOGRAPHY.— gal"va-no-glyph'ic, a.— gal'va-no-graph, n. A printing-surface resembling an engraved copperplate, produced by an electrotype process from a drawing made with viscid ink on a sheet of zinc; also, an impression taken from such a plate.— gal"va-nog'ra-phy, n.— gal"va-no-graph'ic, a.— gal"va-nol'o-gy, n. The science of galvanic phenomena.— gal"va-no'l-gist, n.— gal"va-no-mag-net'ic, a. Same as ELECTROMAGNETIC.

gal"va-nom'e-ter, 1 gal"va-nom'i-ter; 2 găl"va-nŏm'e-ter, n. Elec. An apparatus for measuring current-strength or potential difference, usually having a magnetic needle freely suspended within a wire coil, so that an electric current in the latter causes a deflection of the magnet increasing with the strength of the current. [< GALVANO- + Gr. metron, measure.]— absolute galvanometer, a galvanometer having absolute calibration, and permitting the current to be determined directly from the deflection of a needle. — aperiodic g., a non-oscillating or dead-beat galvanometer.— cosine g., a galvanometer registering the strength of the current as proportionate to the cosine of the angle of the deflection of its needle.— damped or dead-beat g., one in which the needle as-sumes its deflection without os-cillation.— detector g., one of low deflected by oscillations resistance, for testing electrical tro through coil; b, wire wires.— differential g., one hav- winding of coil.

Galvanometer.

ing two coils so wound as to tend to deflect its needle equally but in opposite directions: for measuring the comparative strength of currents.— gal"va-nom'e-ter-shunt", n. A shunt circuit placed around a sensitive galvanometer to protect it from a strong current or to diminish its sensitiveness.— mirror g., one in which the magnet's movements are shown by the movements on a graduated scale of a ray reflected from a mirror borne by it. reflecting g.†.— oscillation g., one used for detecting and measuring electric waves in wireless telegraphy: invented by Ewing.— sine g., one having a vertical coil that can be turned about a vertical axis so as to follow the needle in its deflection until the needle lies in the plane of the coil. The strength of the current is proportionate to the sine of the angle between the magnetic meridian and the final position of the coil.— tangent g., one with a deflecting coil around a short needle supported at the center. The strength of the current is proportionate to the tangent of the needle's angle of deflection.— gal"va-nom'et-ric, a. Pertaining to, measured by, or using a galvanometer. gal"va-no-met'ri-cal†.— gal'va-no-met'ri-cal-ly, adv.

Tangent Galvanometer.

gal'va-nom'e-try, 1 gal'va-nom'i-tri; 2 găl'va-nŏm'e-try, n. The science, art, or process of measuring electric currents; rheometry.

gal"va-no-mo'tive, a. Having the movements regulated by a galvanic current; said of a needle.— gal"va-no-plas'tic, a. Of or pertaining to galvanoplasty.— gal"va-no-plas'ti-cal-ly, adv.— gal"va-no-plas'tics, n. The electric working of art made by electrocoating with metal a plaster model and removing the core. 2. A process for decorating glassware by galvanoplasty.— gal"va-no-plas'ty, n. Elec. The reproduction of the forms of objects by electrodeposition: electrotypy. gal'va-no-plas'tics†.— gal'va-no-plat'er, n. An electrotyper.— gal'va-no-pune'ture, n. Same as ELECTROPUNCTURE.— gal'va-no-scope, n. An instrument employed for detecting an electric current and showing its direction, differing from a galvanometer in being only qualitative.— gal"va-nos'co-pic, a. Of, pertaining to, or detected by a galvanoscope; also, constituting a galvanoscope.— galvanoscope frog, the hind legs of a frog recently killed, used as an electroscope or galvanoscope.— gal"va-nos'co-py, n. 1. Use of the galvanoscope. 2. Med. Diagnosis by galvanism.— gal"va-no-surger-y, n. Use of galvanic electricity in surgery.— gal"va-no-tac'tic, a.— gal"va-no-tech'nics, n. The art of depositing metals, as in electroplating, by means of the electric current.— gal"va-no-ther'a-peu'tics, n. Electrotherapeutics. gal"va-no-ther'a-py†.— gal"va-no-ther-mom'e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring the heat generated by an electric current, for measuring the current by the heat it generates.— gal"va-no-ther"my, n. Production of heat by galvanism.— gal"va-not'o-nus, n. Same as ELECTROTONUS.— gal"va-no-ton'ic, a.— gal"va-no'type-plasm, n. Biol. The movements first set in organisms, especially very simple forms, by the passage of electric currents through them. The curvature is usually toward the positive electrode.— gal"va-no-type'ic, a.

gal'yer, 1 gal'yer; 2 găl'yer, vi. [Prov. Eng.] To move rapidly. gal'ver-ly†, adv. Nimbly; quickly.

Gal'ves-ton, 1 gal'ves-tun; 2 găl'ves-tŏn, n. 1. A county on the S. E. coast of Texas, on the western side of Galveston Bay, a large inlet from the Gulf of Mexico; 835 sq. m. 2. Its county-seat, the principal seaport of Texas, on a low islet at the mouth of the bay; ruinously inundated in 1900.

Gal'way, 1 gôl'wē; 2-gal'wā, n. 1. Lord (1647–1720), Henry de Massue, Marquis de Ruvigny; an English general; born in France; fought at the Boyne. Gal'lo-way. 2. A county in Connaught province, Ireland; 2,342 sq. m. 3. Its capital; three times besieged. 4. G. Bay, a bay between Galway and Clare counties, W. Ireland; 30 by 18 m.

Gal-we'gian, 1 gāl-wē'jăn; 2 gāl-wē'ġĭ-ăn, n. & a. Of or pertaining to Galloway. II. n. A native of Galloway.

Gal'zieh-te, 1 gāl'zĭh-tē; 2 gāl'zēh-tē, n. An African cattle-disease resulting from a trypanosome (Trypanosoma Duttoni).

gam, 1 gam; 2 găm, v. [GAMMED, GAMM'D; GAM'MING.] Naut. I. t. To make a call upon; exchange visits or other courtesies with: said especially of calls or visits exchanged by officers and sailors of fishing- or whaling-vessels.

On Sept. 20 we met the bark Atlantic of New Bedford and 'gammed' her. J. H. B. ROBINSON in The Sun [New York] May 1, 1892, p. 1, col. 2.

II. i. To congregate in a school, as whales; collect and swim together. 2. To visit or call; exchange courtesies: said of fishing-vessels or their crews. [VAR. of JAM, v.] gam, n. 1. A herd of whales. 2. An exchange of visits between whaling-vessels and their crews.

What does the whale do when an enemy another whaler in any sort of decent weather? She has a 'Gam,' a thing so utterly unknown to all other ships that they never heard of the name even.

ga'ma1, 1 gō'mə; 2 gā'ma, n. Bot. A tropical American mimosaceous tree (Inga laurina) which bears large pods filled with an edible, watery, sweetish pulp. The gama is much grown in northern South America as a shade-tree for coffee-shrubs.

Ga'ma2, 1 gō'mə; 2 gā'ma, Vasco da (1469?–1525). A Portuguese navigator; commanded the first expedition to circumnavigate Africa and reach India wholly by sea.

Gam'a-el, 1 gam'ā-el; 2 găm'a-ēl, n. Bib. (Apocrypha). I Esd. viii. 29.

ga'ma-grass'', 1 gō'mə-grus'; 2 gā'ma-ġras', n. A grass (Tripsacum dactyloides) with very large culms from 4 to 7 feet high: used for fodder in the southern United States.

gamahé', n. A cameo; also, a talismanic stone. gamaieu'.

Ga-ma'li-el, 1 gə-mā'lĭ-el; 2 ga-mā'lĭ-ēl, n. Bib. 1. A prince of Manasseh in the Exodus. Num. x, 23. 2. A Pharisee; preceptor of St. Paul, Acts v, 34, [Bib., God is avenger.]

Ga-ma'li-el Smith. Pen-name of Jeremy Bentham.

Gam'a-ri'as, 1 gam'ə-rī'əs; 2 găm'a-rī'as, n. Bib. (Douai).

ga-mash'es, n. pl. Leggings for high boots; short spatter-dashes worn by horsemen, especially in Scotland. gamach'es; gra-mash'es.

Ga-mas'i-dæ, 1 ga-mas'ĭ-dē; 2 ga-mās'ĭ-dē, n. pl. Arach. A family of metastigmatous acaridans with chelicerate mandibles and filiform palpi; beetle-mites or spider-mites. Gam'a-sus, n. (t. g.)—gam'a-sid, a. & n.—gam'a-soid, a.

ga-mass', 1 ga-mas'; 2 ga-măs', n. Same as CAMASS.

gamb, 1 gamb; 2 găm, n. A leg; shank; in heraldry, the entire fore leg of a beast. [F. gambe, < It. gamba, leg, hoof; cp. L. camur, crooked, and W. cam, crooked.] gambe; jambet.

gam'ba1, 1 gam'ba; 2 găm'ba, n. [GAMB-AE; -BI; 2 -bē, pl.] The metacarpus or metatarsus, as in ungulates. [< LL. gamba, hoof: see GAMB.]

gam'ba2, n. [It.] Mus. 1. Same as VIOL DA GAMBA.—gamba bass (organ-building), a 16-foot organ gamba. double gamba; gamba major;—gam'ba-work'', n. The gamba-stops collectively.

gam-bade', 1 gam-bād', -bē'do; 2 găm-bād', -bā'do, n. 1. gam-ba'do, 1 A legging to protect from mud; a spatterdash. 2. pl. Boot-like leathers attached to a saddle, protecting the feet and serving as stirrups. 3. An unreckoning, prank, or flourish. [< It. gamba, leg, < LL. gamba, leg; see GAMB.]

gam'ba-goose'', 1 gam'bə-gūs'; 2 găm'ba-ġūs', n. A spur-winged goose.

gam'bang, 1 gŭm'bəng; 2 găm'băng, n. A Javanese xylophone of wood or metal, resembling the marimba.

gam-beer', 1 gam-bir'; 2 găm-bēr', vt. To gaff (smekeree) when they are swimming: said of a boat beside a vessel. gam-beer'ing-d''ron, n. A smackerel-gaff.

gam'be-son†, n. An old-time defensive coat of leather or of cloth stuffed and quilted.

gam'bet, 1 gam'bet; 2 găm'bĕt, n. A sandpiper of the genus Totanus: specif.: the European redshank. (T. calidris). [< F. gambette, dim. of OF. gambe, leg; see GAMB.] gam'bet-snipe'', Gam-bet'ta, 1 gam-bet'ə or (F.) gaṅ'be'tä'; 2 găm-bĕt'a or (F.) găṅ'bē'tä', Léon Michel (1838–82). French lawyer, statesman, and premier.

gam-bette', 1 gam-bet'; 2 găm-bĕt', n. Organ-building. A four-foot gamba.

Gam'bi-a, 1 gam'bĭ-ə; 2 găm'bi-a, n. 1. A river in Gambia; 700 m. long to the Atlantic ocean. 2. A British crown colony in West Africa, about 14° N. lat.; colony proper, 4 sq. m.; protectorate, 4,130 sq. m.; capital, Bathurst.

gam'bier, 1 gam'bir; 2 găm'bēr, n. [Malay.] Pale catechu. gam'bi-a1; gam'bir. Man-at-arms Wearing Quilted Gambeson. (End of 14th century.)

Gam'bier, n. 1. James, Baron (30/31 1756–4/11 1833), an English admiral who commanded at Copenhagen, 1807. 2. A town in Knox county, O., seat of Kenyon College (Protestant Episcopal), founded in 1824.

Gam'bier Is'lands. 1. A group of islands in the Pacific, lat. 23° 8′ S., long. 134° 58′ W.; a French protectorate. 2. A group of islands in Spencer Gulf, South Australia.

gam'bin, n. A coal-tar dye. See table of DYES. [gamba. gam'bist, 1 gam'bist; 2 găm'bĭst, n. One who plays the gam'bit, 1 gam'bĭt, n. 1. In opening in chess in which a pawn or piece (as in checkers) is sacrificed or risked to obtain an attacking position.

When the proffered piece is captured, the gambit is accepted; if otherwise, it is declined. When the second player offers the first sacrifice or one in return it is a counter-gambit, as when the opponent's pawn is involved a center-g. Other gambits are named (1) from a principal piece involved; as, king's g., queen's g.; (2) from the player by whom originated or developed; as, Cunningham's g., Evans g.; or (3) from the country where invented and chiefly practised; as, Danish g. For the moves of the best-known gambits, see CHESS, n.

2. In the game of hnefatafl, the first part of the game, which consists in getting all the men outside the squares originally occupied. [F., < It. gambetto, < gamba, leg; see GAMBADE.]

gam'ble, 1 gam'bl; 2 găm'bl, v. [GAM'BLED, GAM'BLD†; gam'bl†, 1 GAM'BLING.] I. t. To lose, squander, or dispose of by gaming; followed by away; as, to gamble away a fortune.

II. i. To play a game, especially a game of chance, for stakes; risk money or other possession on an event, chance, or contingency; pretend to buy or sell, depending upon chance variations in prices for gain; as, to gamble for drinks; to gamble on the turn of a card. [Prop. gamm, freq. of ME. gamenen, < AS. gamentan: see GAME, v.]—gam'bling-hell'', n. A resort for gambling.—gambling-house, n. A gambling-hell.

For a government supported by the profits of a gambling-hell . . . what Englishman can feel sympathy?

THOLLOPE West Indies p. 125. [c. 1860.]

—gam'ble-some, a. Given to gambling; disposed to gamble.—gam'ble-some-ness, n.

gam'ble1, n. [Collog.] A gambling venture or transaction; hence, anything in which there is a feature of chance.

gam'ble2, n. [Prov. Eng.] A leg; shank.

gam'bler, 1 gam'blər; 2 găm'bler, n. One who gambles; especially, one who makes gambling his business.

As in every Spanish American country, the natives are inveterate gamblers. A. D. RICHARDSON Beyond the Mississippi p. 251. [ca. a. co. 1867.]

gam'bo, 1 gam'bō; 2 găm'bo, n. [Prov. Eng.] A sledge-like vehicle used in farming, lumbering, etc.

gam-boge', 1 gam-bōj'or -bōj'; 2 găm-bōġ' or -bōġ' (XIII), n. A brownish gum resin obtained from species of Garcinia in Siam, Cochin China, and Ceylon. It occurs in commerce in sticks or rolls, and when powdered is used as a yellow pigment. Medicinally it is a drastic cathartic. Siam gamboge is produced by G. hanburii, Ceylon gamboge by G. morella. G. pictoria yields Cambodge an f an oil. [< Camboja, Cambodia, in Farther India.]

gam-booge'r.—American gamboge, a yellow gum resin obtained from several species of Hypericum, especially V. guianensis, V. baccifera, and V. cessiliflora.—extract of g., a pigment consisting of gamboge and alumina.—false g., a gum resin yielded by an East-Indian clusiaceous tree (Garcinia pictoria).—Mexican g., a resin like gamboge, obtained from a Mexican tree (Vismia mexicana).—gam-bo'gi-an, gam-bo'gic, a.—gam-bo'gi-ate, n. A salt of gamboge acid.

gam-bo'gic, 1 gam-bō'jĭk; 2 găm-bō'ġĭc, a. Chem. Characterizing an acid present in gamboge. gam-bo'dic.

gam'bol, 1 gam'bəl; 2 găm'bol, n. Quilted or padded as a gambeson; especially, quilted in folds so as to be stiffer in one direction than in another: said of leather or fabrics. [< OF. gambeçon, gambaçon, gambaison, gambeson(-), < OHG. wamba, belly.] gam'boi'se-rie', n. [F.] Gamboised work.

gam'boi, 1 gam'boi; 2 găm'boi, vi. [BOLED or -BOLLED, -BOILD†; -BOL-ING or -BOI-LING.] To skip spottively about, as children or lambs; frisk and leap in play; caper; frolic. Syn.: see FRISK.

gam'boi, n. A skipping about in sport; playful leaping. [< OF. gambois, < It. gamba, leg, < LL. gamba, leg; see GAMB.] Syn.: see FROLIC.

gam'bone†, n. & n. Same as GAMMON2.

gam'bre1, 1 gam'bre; 2 găm'brĕ, vt. [-BRELED or -BRELLED; -BREL-ING or -BREL-LING.] 1. To hang up by means of a gambrel. 2. To give a crook or curb to, as a rod; make with a double pitch. gam'brif.

gam'bre1, n. 1. The hock of a horse or other animal. 2. The crooked piece which like a horse's hind leg, used to hang up an animal's carcass while dressing it. 3. A gambrel roof. [< OF. gambe; see GAMB.]

gam'brel, n. gambrel roof, having its slope broken by an obtuse angle: double-pitched roof; curb roof.

Gam-bri'nus, 1 gam-brī'nŭs; 2 găm-brī'nŭs, n. (1251–1294) Duke of Brabant; reputed inventor of beer. 2. A figurative name for a king holding a foaming glass. [Possibly a corruption of Jean Primus, "John the First."] gam'brook1, 1 gam-brūk'; 2 găm-brūk', n. 1. A light, well-built cloth of worsted and linen, used for linings. 2. A twilled linen lining-material. [< Gombroon, Per. seaport.]

gam'dc-boo, 1 gam'də-bū; 2 găm'de-bōō, n. [Afr.] A small tree (Celtis brevistylosa) of the elm family of South Africa, having a tough fiber; stinkwood.

game, 1 gēm; 2 ġām, n. [GAMED; GAM'ING.] I. t. To lose or wager at play; gamble. II. i. To gamble with cards, dice, or the like; play a game for money or other wager.

As the plague takes away life, doth gaming goods.

BOURNE Antiquities of Newcastle p. 181. [c. a. co. 1857.]

2†. To engage in any sport or diversion; play. 3†. To rejoice; be glad: in Old English frequently impersonal with dative. [< AS. gamenian, < gamen, sport.]

game1, a. 1. Of or pertaining to game. (1) Suitable for hunting; as, a game animal. (2) Composed of the flesh of such animals; as, a game pie. 2. Having the pluck or unyielding spirit of a game-cock; ready to begin or to continue a fight or struggle; unflinching; courageous; to be game: sometimes used in a sense approaching the adverbial.

Hale mounted the scaffold saying only that he wished he had another life to lose to his country. . . . Hale was a brave man, and standers to observe that he met his fate like a brave man—that, as a more vulgar criminal would have said, he 'died game.'

BENJAMIN GAY United States p. 97. [a. 1881.]

3. [Slang.] Ready; willing: followed by for or an infinitive; as, game to go; game for a run.

game2, a. [Collog.] Lame or crooked; as, a game leg.

gam'ete, 1 gam'ĭt; 2 găm'ēt, n. Biol. A sexual reproductive cell, naked or invested with a membrane, motile or nonsmotile; a generat.ve cell. Gametes are developed from mother-cells in the testes and ovary. By the conjugation, or fusion, of two gametes a new cell is produced. A sexual process similar to conjugation occurs in some protozoans, and in these the reproductive cells are termed gametes, as are the sexual cells of higher organisms. In algæ and fungi, the gametes being externally similar, conjugation is isogamous and sexuality is not known as a separate fact. In higher plants the gametes are differentiated into male (spermatozoid) and female (egg), and their fusion is called fertilization. The product is termed a zygote or oospore. Free-swimming isogamous reproductive cells are usually somewhat club-shaped, ciliated, and destitute of a wall (Ulothrix, Botrydium) and are termed planogametes. Similar gametes, nonciliated, are found in Spirogyra.

This process of fusion between the two kinds of reproductive cells, which are termed gametes . . . is the process sometimes spoken of as the fertilization of the female cell, and as the result is the establishment of a new individual.

S.] A harmless American striped colubrine serpent (genus Eutænia), especially E. sirtalis, the most common and widely distributed species. The American snakes, variously greatly in striping.—g.-webbing, n. A narrow elastic webbing enclosed in a covering of silk ribbon: used for garters.—Order of the G., the highest order of knighthood in Great Britain. It was instituted in January 1350, by Edward III., in honor of the Holy Trinity, the Virgin Mary, Saint Edward the Confessor, and Saint George. The last named has been the military patron of England, he other was designated as the Order of Saint George, a name which it bore until the reign of Edward VI. The popular tradition that the order was instituted upon the occasion of the Countess of Salisbury at a ball and placed it on his own knee, saying, "Honi soit qui mal y penss" (May he be shamed who evil thinks), dates back to the reign of Henry VI. The order is composed of 25 knights companions exclusive of the sovereign, royal family, and foreign princes and was originally composed of the king, the Black Prince, and 24 knights chosen for their prowess in a special tournament for the purpose of selecting suitable candidates. See ORDER.—prick the g., an old indoor game, a variety of "fast and loose," or of the trick "drink o' the loop."

gas, 1 gas; 2 gäs, v. [GASSED, GAS'ᵉD; GAS'SING.] I. t. 1. To expose to the action of a gas-flame or a heated surface so as to free from loose fibers; singe: as, to gas lace. 2. To saturate with gas, as lime in chlorination. 3. [Slang.] To impose upon by idle tales or boastful speech; "fool." 4. Mil. To poison by gas or gas-fumes. II. i. 1. To form and give off gas: an indication of certain chemical conditions. 2. [Slang.] To talk nonsense, vapor. 3. Mil. To be poisoned by gas or gas fumes.

gas, n. 1. Matter in the aeriform state; that fluid form of matter which is elastic and tends to expand indefinitely. See FLUID, and KINETIC THEORY, under KINETIC. A gas is in nearly all cases, under ordinary conditions, characterized by great transparency and such extreme tenuity as to be imperceptible to touch when at rest.

2. (1) An aeriform mixture used as illuminant or fuel.

Gas used for illuminating is essentially hydrogen enriched by carbon. It is natural gas or coal-gas when found in nature beneath the earth's surface, as when liberated by boring; it is illuminating-gas or lighting-gas when used for lighting, in distinction from fuel-gas, used for heating or cooking. Coal-gas is distilled from coal, and oil-gas and naphtha-gas, from hydrocarbon oils; air-gas and water-gas are air and steam, respectively, passed through a mixture of hydrocarbons. Many gases, having some special quality or use, are named after inventors, as Blau gas, used in the arts, for lighting and heating, and, in combination with oxygen, for piercing steel plates, and a liquid form of improved Pintsch gas discovered by a German physicist Hermann Blau. Antidotes for gas poisoning are artificial respiration, oxygen, and coffee.

Illuminating-gas by the Decomposition of Water.

The generator (b) having been charged with fuel, an air-blast is turned on from the blower (c) until the fuel is heated to incandescence, the burning gases passing through the carburetor (e) and the superheater (f) which are filled with fire-brick, laid in alternate soldier rows, and out through the regenerator (g) and stack. The air-blast is then turned off and the steam generated in the boiler (a) is allowed to pass through this incandescent mass. The steam is decomposed by the heat of the fuel-bed into oxygen and hydrogen, the oxygen combining with the carbon in the fuel to form carbonic oxid and some carbonic acid. The gases thus formed pass into the carburetor (e) meeting a vapor or mist of hydrocarbon oils supplied through an atomizer at the top of the chamber (e). The mixture of gases and hydrocarbons then passes through the chambers (e) and (d), coming in contact with the incandescent fire-brick, or checkers, which give up their heat, breaking up or "cracking" the oil-vapors into fixed hydrocarbon gases and tars. From the superheater (d) the gas passes through a tube (h) down into the washer (e), where part of the unfixed oils and water-vapors are removed by bubbling the gas through water. It then passes through the hot-scrubber (f) and condenser (g), where more of the condensable vapors are removed, and then into the relief-holder (k), which acts as a balance for the system. The gas is then drawn from the relief-holder by the exhauster (i) and forced through the purifier (l), meter (m), and station-meter (n), into the storage-holder (m), then through mains to the consumers.

—Dowson gas, a water-gas made from red-hot coal treated with jets of steam.—dry gas, power-gas made without steam.—gas'-a-nal'y-sis, n. Gasometric analysis.—gas analyzer, n. An apparatus for the analysis of illuminating-gas.—gas-bacillus, n. The Bacillus œrogenes capsulatus, found in blood-vessels of sufferers from thoracic aneurism. It produces gas in culture-media.—gas-bag, n. 1. A bag suitable for holding gas. 2. A rubber bag introduced into a weak in a gas-main and inflated to stop the flow of gas. [Colloq.] 3. A loquacious person.—gas-bath, n. A bath the contents of which may be heated by gas.—gas battery (Elec.), a voltaic battery the active elements of which are gases.—gas black, see BLACK.—gas-blast, n. A strong blast that feeds a gas-flame.—gas-bleaching, n. Bleaching by the use of sulfur dioxid or chlorin.—gas-boiler, n. A boiler heated by gas.—gas-bracket, n. A bracket for compressed gas. 2. A retort.—gas-box, n. That portion of an internal-combustion engine between the rubbing compartment and the explosion-chamber.—gas-brake, n. A bracket bearing one or more gas-burners.—gas-burette, n. Chem. A graduated glass burette or other container suitable for gas, by means of which the volume upon them of reagents can be measured.—gas-burner, n. A tube or tip, usually attached to a gas-fixture, for regulating the flame of the gas consumed.—gas-calorimeter, n. A device for ascertaining the amount of heat-energy set free by the burning given amount of a certain gas, thence determining its heat-value.—gas-cap, n. Elec. A glass cover to protect the carbons of an arc-lamp from too much air, thus lessening the rate of combustion.—gas-carbon, n. A compact amorphous carbon deposited in the retorts of gas-works. It is a good conductor of heat and electricity, and is used for battery-plates and in the electric arc-light.—gas-cavity, n. In crystals, a cavity filled with gas, as nitrogen or carbon dioxid.—gas-check, n. A device for preventing the escape of gas at the breech of a gun.—gas-coal, n. Bituminous coal from which illuminating-gas may be made.—gas-coke, n. Same as GAS-CARBON.—gas company, a company formed for manufacturing illuminating-gas and distributing or fuel-gas to a community.—gas-compressor, n. A pumping device for compressing gas into portable reservoirs.—gas-condenser, n. An apparatus for condensing vapors from illuminating-gas in its manufacture.—gas-conductor, n. A pipe for leading combustion-gases from the mouth of a blast-furnace to a hot-blast stove.—gas-cock, n. A cock. Any cyst containing gas; usually, the product of gas-producing bacilli.—gas-detector, n. A device to show the presence of fire-damp, etc., in a mine.—gas-disease, n. A pathological condition among fishes resulting from an excess of gas and manifested especially in the bulging of the eyeballs designated as popeye.—gas-distributor, n. Chem. A laboratory device for controlling by a cock or stopcock the distribution of illuminating or other gas to lights or to pieces of apparatus requiring light or heat.—gas-drain, n. A drain for carrying off drainage from gas-producing.—gas-dyer, n. Same as GASOLIER.—gas-equation, n. A formula for determining the ratio between volume and pressure in a gas.—gas-field, n. A region producing natural gas.—gas-fired, a. Heated by burning gas; as, a gas-fired furnace.—gas-firing, a.—gas-fitter, n. One who cuts, fits, and puts up pipes and fixtures for gas-lighting.—gas-fittings, n. pl. The appliances used in connecting gas-pipes.—gas-fixture, n. A device, usually ornamental, for connecting with a gas-pipe, as in a ceiling or wall, and bearing one or more burners and stop-cocks for controlling the flow of gas.—gas-gage, n. A gage for measuring the pressure of gas.—gas-generator, n. An apparatus for generating gas.—Babo's gas-generator

(Chem.), an instrument consisting of two glass bulbs so arranged on a tilting support that either can be depressed at will. One bulb is intended for the solid chemical, as iron sulfid; the other for the acid, as sulfuric acid. When not in use, the acid-compartment is maintained at a lower elevation than the other.—Kipp's gas-generator (Chem.), an apparatus of glass for the economical evolution of such gases as sulfureted hydrogen, carbon dioxid, sulfur dioxid, hydrocyanic acid, etc., and consisting of a system of three globular compartments, the lower two communicating directly, the upper and lower by means of tubular extension from the former. The middle compartment carries the delivery tube and is intended also to contain the solid material, as iron sulfid. When not in action, the liquid occupies both lower and upper compartments. The spent liquid can be withdrawn from the lower compartment at will.—gas-globe, n. A globe for surrounding a gaslight.—gas-governor, n. A device for regulating the flow of gas in a main or fixture.—gas-grate, n. A grill or grate made to burn gas through many small apertures; as (1) in place of a coal-grate; (2) in a gas-stove.—gas-gun, n. A pipe for exploding gas in making experiments.—gas-harpoon, n. A harpophone.—gas-heater, n. Any contrivance for using gas as a fuel.—gas-holder, n. A receptacle in which gas is stored for use; a gasometer.—Mitscherlich's gas-holder, a vessel so arranged that by emptying it of water gas will be drawn in, after which, by introducing water into the vessel, the gas may be compressed and drawn out as desired.—gas-indicator, n. An instrument for showing the presence of gas in a pipe or for detecting fire-damp in a mine.—gas-jet, n. 1. A tip or burner on a gas-fixture. 2. The jet of flame on a gas-burner.—gas-lamp, n. A lamp burning gas.—gas-light, n. 1. Light produced by gas. 2. A gas-jet or -burner.—gas-lighted, a.—gas-lighting, n.—gas-lime, n. A dry-slaked lime used as a purifying agent in the manufacture of illuminating-gas.—gas-liquor, n. Same as AMMONIACAL LIQUOR. See under AMMONIACAL.—gas-log, n. A gas-burner for a fireplace consisting of a perforated iron cartridge having the appearance of a log or a pile of logs.—gas-machine, n. An air-carbureter for producing illuminating-gas.—gas-main, n. A trunk gas-pipe for conveying gas to the service-pipes.—gas-man, n. One who manufactures or supplies gas for lighting. 2. A gas-fitter. 3. In mining, one who superintends ventilation and guards against fire-damp. 4. Theat. The person in charge of the gas and light effects.—gas-meter, n. An apparatus for measuring the quantity of gas consumed in a given place and time.—gas-motor, n. A gas-engine.—gas-oil, n. See OIL.—gas-oven, n. An oven heated by gas.—gas-oxygen, n. Same as OXYCOAL-GAS.—gas-pillar, n. The part of a gas-burner that is screwed to the fixture-tube and carries the tip, or burner proper, at the top.—gas-pipe, n. A pipe for supplying gas, especially illuminating-gas.—gas-plant, n. 1. A gas-works. 2. Fraxinella (Dictamnus fraxinella), a heavy-scented ornamental plant giving out from its glandular foliage an inflammable vapor.—gas-plate, n. A steel disk in the breech-block of a gun to receive the impact of the gases of explosion.—gas-plot, n. The diagram of gas-pipes and fixtures in a theater.—gas-pocket, n. Any small hollow in which gas has collected: as, (1) in a volcanic ranean strata, whence it may be tapped by a well soon exhausted; or (2) in a furnace when it is likely to explode.—gas-pore, n. A gas-bubble in a metal.—gas-port, n. An opening permitting access to an underground valve or cock of a gas-pipe.—gas-producer, n. An apparatus for making fuel-gas, usually for immediate use in an adjacent furnace.—gas-prover, n. A pump for testing the tightness of gas-pipes and stoves.—gas-pump, n. 1. A pump driven by a gas-engine. 2. A gas-compressor.—gas-radiator, n. A radiator attached to a gas-heater.—gas-range, n. A gas-stove for cooking.—gas-regulator, n. An apparatus for recording gas-pressure.—gas-regulator, n. A gas-governor.—Reichert's gas-regulator, a kind of thermostat used to keep an even temperature in certain scientific apparatus by regulating the flow of gas. It is self-regulating, and is kept from any possibility of leakage and explosion by the use of a by-pass which keeps one small flame in constant use.—gas-ring, n. A chamber in which gas is generated by heat.—gas-ring, n. A metal ring used as a gas-check.—gas-sand, n. Any sand stone that contains or yields natural gas.—gas-saver, n. A gas-burner that economizes gas.—gas-spurt, n. Geol. One of numerous little heaps resembling worm-burrows on the surface of certain layers of rock. They are supposed to have resulted from the intermittent escape of gas from decomposing organic matter in the original mud.—gas-stove, n. A stove in which gas is used for fuel.—gas-table, n. A table near the apparatus for controlling the gaslights of a theater.—gas-tank, n. A gasometer.—gas-tar, n. See COAL-TAR.—gas-thermometer, n. See THERMOMETER.—gas-tight, a. Not permitting the escape of gas: said of gas-pipes, gas-burners, etc.—gas-tip, n. A plug or cap fitted to a gas-burner to regulate, by the shape and size of its opening, the shape and size of the flame produced. A common form is cut from flint and known as a lava tip.—gas-trap, n. A trap to prevent sewer-gas from backing up in a pipe.—gas-washer, n. An apparatus for removing ammonia from illuminating-gas.—gas-water, n. Gas-liquor. See AMMONIACAL.—gas-well, n. A well from which natural gas issues in quantities. See illus. under PACKER.—gas-works, n. An establishment in a gas-works.—gas-works, n. A commercial establishment in which gas (usually illuminating-gas) is manufactured.—generator gas, producer gas.—ground gases, underground gases as distinguished from atmospheric gases.—hydrocarbon gas, the gaseous mixture resultant from the action of steam (usually steam and air) at high temperature upon many vein-containing carbon and hydrogen to be set free.—ideal gas. Same as PERFECT GAS.—incandescent gas-lamp, a gas-lamp provided with a wire-gauze or similar mantle which becomes brilliantly incandescent.—irrespirable gas, any gas which causes difficulty in breathing or stricture of the larynx.—Mond gas, a special process generator gas.—mustard gas, a poisonous gas, dichlorethyl sulfid ($(ClH_2C)_2S$), that affects the eyelids and skin.—oleflant gas (Chem.), same as ETHYLENE.—pan gas, hydrochloric acid gas, as produced by the action of sulfuric acid on salt in iron pans, in the first stage of the Leblanc process of soda-making. Compare ROASTER GAS.—perfect gas, a gas such that all the external work done upon it is transformed into molecular energy of heat. No such gas exists in nature. Compare PERFECT FLUID, under FLUID.—Pintsch gas, an illuminating-gas made by a special process from petroleum: used especially for lighting railway cars.—pit-gas, n. Fire-damp (CH_4).—portable gas, gas compressed in reservoirs and served therein to consumers.—power-gas, n. Fuel-gas.—roaster gas, a gas akin to pan gas, produced in the second stage of Leblanc soda-making by roasting niter-cake mixed with brick containers. Compare PAN GAS.—semi-water gas, a gas made by forcing a mixture of air and steam into a producer; intermediate between producer gas and water-gas.

Gas'con-ade', n. Same as GASCONADE.

Gas'con-ade', v. Same as GASCONADE.

Gas'con-ism, n. Same as GASCONADE.

Gas'co-ny, [gas'kō-ni; 2 gȧs'co-ny, n. A former province in S. W. France; now included in four departments; it belonged to England, 1154–1453. Gas'cogne',—Gascony sauce, a sauce of truffles, capers, and eggyolk.

gas'cromh, n. [Scot.] A cæsarean. gas'crome†.

gas'e-ous, [gas'i-us; 2 gȧs'e-us (xiii), a. 1. Having the nature or form of gas; aeriform.

It is next to certain that the sun is mainly gaseous.
C. A. YOUNG The Sun ch. 6, p. 211. [A. 1881.]

2. Figuratively, light and insubstantial; superficial.—gas'e-ous-ness, n.—gas-e'i-fy† [gas'e-i-fy; 2 gȧs'e-i-fy†.

gash', [gash; 2 gȧsh, vt. To make a long deep cut in: said particularly of flesh; as, his arm was gashed. [< OF. garser, < Gr. charassō, scratch.] SYN: see CUT.

gash², vi. [Scot.] To talk idly: tattle; gossip.

gash', a. [Scot.] 1. Fluent; intelligent. 2. Neat; trim.

gash⁴, a. [Scot.] Ghastly.

gash, n. 1. A long deep incision made by a sharp instrument; specif., a flesh-wound. 2. pl. [Rare.] Cirrus clouds.—gash'y, a.

gash-helmet, n. A protective head-piece covering the face and worn by firemen and soldiers to protect them from poisonous gases. See illus. under HELMET.—gas-mask†.

gash'ful, [gash'ful; 2 gȧsh'fûl, a. [Dial., Scot.] Having a long or projecting chin.

gash'ly, a. [Prov. Eng.] Inspiring horror or dread; ghastly.

gash'ness, [gash'nes; 2 gȧsh'nes, n. [Dial., Scot.]

Gash'mu, [gash'mu; 2 gȧsh'mu, n. Bib. Neh. vi, 6.

gas'shold'er, gas'sh'ld-er, gas'shold'er-ess etc. See under GAS.

gassi, pp. Gashed.

gas'sing, [gas'ing; 2 gȧs'ing, n. Gaseous.

gas'i-fy, [gas'i-fi; 2 gȧs'i-fy, v. [-FIED; -FY'ING.] To make gas from; convert into gas, as by heat or chemical means. [< GAS + -FY.] —gas-i-fi'a-ble, a. Capable of gasification.—gas'i-fi-ca'tion, n.—gas't-fi'er, n.

gas'ket, [gas'ket; 2 gȧs'ket. Elizabeth C. (née Stevenson) [F. 1816–]—Wife of Alexander Gasket. An Episcopal clergyman.

gas'ket, [gas'ket; 2 gȧs'ket, n. To fasten (furled sails, etc.) with gaskets.

gas'ket, n. 1. Mech. (1) A thin, flat, annular packing-piece of gutta-rubber, leather, or sheet metal, placed between two flat surfaces, as a manhole-plate and a boiler-head, to make their joint water-tight. (2) A packing of hemp or other fibrous stuff, or of lead, between the ball of one pipe and the spigot or nade end of another. 2. Naut. A tapering rope plaited up of foxes, used to confine furled sails to the yard or boom.

They [sailors] spent the time . . . in making gaskets, that were to confine the unruly canvas to the prescribed limits.
COOPER Pilot p. 40. [N. Y. c.]

[Appar. < F. garcette, cat-o'-nine-tails, < Sp. garceta,—] gas'ket-t'ron, n. A tool for tamping gaskets in the bolts of socket-pipes.

gas'kin, [gas'kin; 2 gȧs'kin, n. The hinder part of a horse's thigh between the stifle and the hock. [< GALLIGASKINS.]

gas'king, [gas'king; 2 gȧs'king, n. Packing of hemp or the like. [< GASKET.]

gas'kins, n. pl. 1. Same as GASKING. 2†. Same as GALLIGASKINS.

gas'less, [gas'les, 2 gȧs'les, a. Having no gas.

gas'light, [gas'lit, etc. See under GAS.

gas-mo'bile, [gas-mō'bil; 2 gȧs-mō'bil, n. An automobile propelled by a gasoline-engine.

gas'o-cen'tric, [gas'ō-sen'trik; 2 gȧs'o-ce-ẽn'trik, a. Auto. Relating to or designating automobile propulsion in which an electric motor and a gas-line-engine are used.

gas'o-gen, [gas'ō-jen, -jin; 2 gȧs'o-ĝẽn, -ĝin, n. A portable gas-engine, like contrivance for producing gas for aerating water, by the action of an acid on a bicarbonate. [< F. gazogène, < gaz, gas, and see -GENE.] gas'o-gene†.

gas-o-ge'neous, [gas-ō-jē'nus; 2 gȧs-ō-ĝẽ'nus, a. Gas-producing.

gas'o-line, [gas'ō-lin or -lin; 2 gȧs'o-lin or -lin (XIII), n. A colorless, volatile, inflammable product of the distillation of crude petroleum, having a specific gravity of .629 to .667 (95° to 80° B.). It is used as fuel in vapor-stoves and for carbonizing air and water-gases.

Top View of the Upper End of a Dry Gas-meter.

The movements of the gas alternately expands and shrinks the diaphragm or bellows-like construction that occupies the greater part of the space in the meter, below the mechanism here shown, which measures a certain quantity of gas at each operation. The arms g, g, attached to the top of the diaphragm, receive from it a wavering rectilineal motion, assisted by the tangent screw t, driving the clockwork and operating the dials.

We find gasoline in use in the states in the hands of hundreds of persons who do not know that the vapor arising from it, when mixed with the atmosphere in the proper proportion, is one of the most dangerous explosives.
Rep. Sec. of Mich. State Bd. of Health, 1888 p. 200. [1889.]

[< GAS + -OL.] gas'o-lene†.—gasoline forge, a gasoline torch with two jets which may be brought to bear on the same spot.

gas-om'e-ter, [gas-om'i-ter; 2 gȧs-ôm'e-ter, n. 1. A tank for storing gas, consisting usually of an iron cylinder closed at the top and open at the bottom, resting in a water-tank in which it rises or falls as gas is admitted or withdrawn. Chem. 2. Any apparatus adapted to collecting, holding, or mixing gases. (2) More properly, an apparatus for measuring gases, used in chemical manipulations. [Gas + Gr. metron, measure.]—Bunsen's gasometer, a graduated glass container for gases which is so arranged as to collect and hold them until they are drawn off. The gas as it enters displaces the mercury or water which fills the container.—gas'om'e-try, n. The measurement of gases.

gas'o-met'ric, [gas'ō-met'rik; 2 gȧs'o-met'rik, a. Or or pertaining to the measurement of gases.—gas'o-met'ri-cal†.—gasometric analysis, a method of estimating the quantity of gases, either singly or in mixture, by burning them and measuring the product, or by direct use of absorbents.

gas'o-scope, [gas'ō-skōp; 2 gȧs'o-scōp, n. An instrument for showing the presence of inflammable gas.

gasp, [gasp; 2 gȧsp, n. 1. The act of breathing with gaping mouth, as in fear or in dying; followed by out or away.

II. t. 1. To struggle for breath with open mouth; breathe convulsively, as from exhaustion or fear.

He could not speak
When shipwrecked forms might gasp amid the waves,
And not a cry be answered from the shore.
T. FESSENDEN Harmony Petrel st. 5.

2. To express eager desire, as with gasps: with for or after. [< Icc. geispa, yawn.]

gasp, n. An act of gasping; labored and difficult breathing; a struggling to get a full breath.—the last gasp, the last breath in dying; hence, the final struggle or last extremity.

—gasp'er, n.—gasp'i-ness, n.—gasp'y, a.

Gas'par, [gas'par; 2 gȧs'par, n. 1. One of the Three Kings of Cologne. See under KING¹. 2. Same as JASPER.

Gas'pard',

Gas'par'rin', [gas'pa-ran'; 2 gȧs'pa-rȧn', Agénor Étienne, Count de (7/12 1810–8/14 1871). A French publicist; religious liberty and antislavery advocate.

Gas'pé', [gas'pā'; 2 gȧs'pā', n. A peninsula in E. Quebec province, Canada; fisheries. 2. A district in Quebec, Canada; 4,703 sq. m.; capital, Percé.

gas'pe-reau, [gas'pe-rō; 2 gȧs'pe-rō, n. [Canadian F.] The alewife (Clupea pseudoharengus). gas'pe-rōt.

gas'per-gou, [gas'per-gū; 2 gȧs'per-gu, n. [Local, U. S.] The fresh-water drum (Haploidonotus grunniens).

gasp'ing, [gasp'ing; 2 gȧsp'ing, n. Convulsive or laborious exertion in breathing; a gasp.—gasp'ing-ly, adv.

gas't-plant', gas'-range', etc. See under GAS.

gaspi, pp. Gasped. S. S.

gas'rang, [gas'ran; 2 gȧs'rȧng, n. A small Arab coin.

Gas'sen'di', [gas'sen'di'; 2 gȧs'sȧn'di', Pierre (7/21 1592–9/14 1655). A French savant; first to detect a transit of Mercury.—Gas-sen'dist, n. A disciple of Gassendi in propagating Epicureanism.

gas'ser, [gas'er; 2 gȧs'er, n. 1. One who talks nonsense. 2. A well that produces gas, especially an oil-well that yields much gas. 3. One who manipulates a gassing-frame.

Gas'ser-i-an, [gas-sē'ri-an; 2 gȧs-sē'ri-an, a. Pertaining to the German physician J. L. Gasser.—Gas-se'ri-an' (pe-ronеus).—Gasserian artery, the small branch of the carotid artery which supplies the Gasserian ganglion.—Gasserian ganglion, the large ganglion on the root of the fifth nerve.

gas'sing, [gas'in; 2 gȧs'ing, n. 1. The act or process of singeing off the loose diverging fibers from thread, cloth, etc., by means of gas. 2. Exposure, as cotton to the action of a gas, as lime to chlorin in preparing bleaching-powder. 3. [Slang.] The act of indulging in pretentious or boastful talk. 4. Partial suffocation induced by the presence of chlorin or kerosene by workmen. 5. The agitation of the acid in a storage-battery.—gas'sing-frame', n. A machine for winding and unwinding yarns, threads, etc.: used in gassing.

gas'sour', [gas'our; 2 gȧs'our, n. [Slang.] A mineral soap.

gas'spurt', gas'ta'ble, etc. See GAS.

gas'sy, [gas'i; 2 gȧs'y, a. 1. Characteristic of or impregnated with gas, especially coal-gas, as by gassy smell. 2. [Slang.] (1) Addicted to pretentious or boastful talk; vaporing. (2) [Eng.] Quick to flare up; irascible.—gas'si-ness, n.

gast, [gast, vt. To terrify. Compare AGHAST. gast'er†.

gas-tal'dite, [gas-tal'dit; 2 gȧs-tȧl'dit, n. Mining. A variety of glaucophane. [< B. Gastaldi.]

Gas'tein, [gas'tīn; 2 gȧs'tīn, n. A valley in the Noric Alps, Salzburg province, Austria; 30 m. long; has mineral springs.

gas'ter, [gas'ter; 2 gȧs'ter, n. 1. [Rare.] The stomach or abdomen. 2. Ent. The abdomen, exclusive of petiole: said of ants, wasps, and the like.

gas'ter-al'gi-a, [gas'ter-al'ji-a; 2 gȧs'ter-ȧl'ji-a, n. Same as GASTRALGIA.

gas'ter-as-the'ni-a, [gas'ter-as-thi'ni-a; 2 gȧs'ter-ȧs-thē'ni-a, n. Pathol. Debility of the stomach-muscles or of the gastric functions. gas'tras-the'ni-a†.

gas'ter-ic, a. [Rare.] Same as GASTRIC.

gas'ter-o-, [gas'ter-o-; 2 gȧs'ter-o-. From Gr. gastēr, stomach: a combining form of GASTER. gastro-. Gas'ter-o-com'bi-dæ, n. pl. Echin. A Devonian family of larviform insidumate crinoids having a dicyclic base, the anus dorsal and between two of the radials, and ambulacra arborescent or widely divergent. Gas'ter-oc'o-ma, n. (t. g.).—gas'ter-oc'o-mid, n.—Gas'ter-oc'o-moid, a.—Gas'ter-o-il-che'tes, n. pl. Bot. A group of fungi in which plasmogamy is supposed to be formed by the union of algal cells and a gasteromycetous fungus.—Gas'ter-o-my-ce'tes, n. pl. Bot. The angiocarpous division of the basidiomycetous fungi, having the hymenia produced inside the fructification, instead of covering a free outer surface, as in the Hymenomycetes. The carthamar (Geaster) and the puffball (Lycoperdon) are the best-known examples.—gas'ter-o-my-ce'tous, a.—Gas'ter-o-peg'ma-ta, n. pl. Conch. A suborder of hyopomatous brachiopods with the ventral valve attached to foreign bodies, as in Crania.—gas'ter-oph'i-lus, n. Same as GASTROPHILUS.—gas'ter-o-pod, a. & n. Gastropod.—Gas'ter-op'o-da, n. pl. Conch. A division of mollusks, especially a class having a headlike extension of the body, generally carrying tentacles, and a foot arising from the ventral surface: including all snails and slugs.—gas'ter-op'o-dan, a. & n.—gas'ter-op'o-dous, a.—Gas'ter-op-ter'i-dæ, n. pl. Conch. A family of testibranchiate gastropods with extremely large lateral natatory lobes and a small nautiliform shell. Gas″ter-op′ter-on, n. (t. g.)— gas″ter-op′ter-id, n.— gas″ter-op′ter-oid, a.— Gas″ter-o-ste′i-dæ, n. pl. Ich. A family of gasterosteoidean fishes having subthoracic ventrals, each with a spine and ray, and a convex or subtubular snout; sticklebacks. Gas″ter-os′te-us, n. (t. g.) — gas″ter-os′te-id, n.—gas″ter-os′te-oid, a. & n.— Gas″ter-os″te-i-for′mes, n. pl. Ich. A division of acanthopterygian fishes with ventrals, and with abdominal and dorsal spines (when present) isolated, as in Gasterosteidæ.— gas″ter-os′te-i-form, a. — Gas″ter-os″te-oi′de-a, n. pl. Ich. A superfamily of hemibranchiate fishes having anterior vertebræ little enlarged, and ventrals subthoracic, with enlarged spines.— gas″ter-os″te-oi′de-an, a. & n.— Gas″ter-o-sto′mi-dæ, n. pl. Helminth. A family of digeneous trematode worms with the oral sucker submedian and ventral and an anterior sucker. Gas″ter-os′to-mum, n (t. g.) — gas″ter-os′to-mid, n.— gas″ter-os′to-moid, a.— gas″ter-o-the′ca, n. [-CÆ, pl.] Entom. The case or sheathing of the abdomen of a pupa.— gas″ter-o-the′cal, a.— Gas″ter-ot′ri-cha, n. pl. Helminth. A division of worms, variously ranked, especially an order of rotifers with two ventral ciliated bands, a simple cerebral ganglion, two twisted water-canals, simple muscle-cells, and anus dorsal: including Chætonotidæ.— gas″ter-ot′ri-chan, a. & n.— gas″ter-ot′ri-chous, a.— gas″ter-o-zo′oid, n. Zooph. A zooid, having a mouth and a gastric cavity.

Anatomy of a pectinibranchiate gastropod (Turbo pica) taken out of the shell; f, foot; o, operculum; p, proboscis; ta, tentacles; e, eye; m, mantle, cleft longitudinally so as to open the respiratory cavity; am, anterior edge of the mantle, which, in the natural position, covers the back and leaves an opening admitting water to the gills; g, gills; bv, branchial vein, proceeding to the heart (h); b, branchial artery; a, anus; i, intestine; s, stomach and liver; ov, oviduct; d, fringe of the mantle.

gast′ful†, gast′ful-ness†, etc. Same as GHASTFUL, etc.

gast′ness†, n. Terror; ghastliness.

Gas′ton, 1 gas′tən; 2 găs′ton, n. A county in W. S. W. North Carolina; 359 sq. m.; county-seat, Dallas.

Gas″ton′ de Foix. See FOIX, GASTON DE.

Gas-to′ni-a, 1 gas-tō′nı-ə; 2 găs-tō′ni-a, n. A town in Gaston county, North Carolina.

Gas-tor′nis, 1 gas-tōr′nıs; 2 găs-tôr′nis, n. Ornith. 1. A genus typical of Gastornithidæ. 2. [g-] A fossil bird of this genus, as Gastornis parisiensis from the Paris basin. [< Gaston Planté, the discoverer, + Gr. ornis, bird.]

gas″tor-rhe′a, -rhœ′a, n. Same as GASTRORRHEA.

gas′tr-, 1 gas′tr-; 2 găs′tr-. From Greek gastēr, stomach: a combining form. See also GASTERO-, GASTRO-.— gas-trad″e-ni′tis, n. Pathol. Same as GASTROADENITIS.

gas-træ′a, 1 gas-trī′ə; 2 găs-trē′a, n. [-Æ, 1 -ī; 2 -ē, pl.] Biol. A hypothetical primitive gastrula-like animal form assumed by Haeckel to have been the ancestor of higher animals or metazoans and represented in the transitionary gastrula stage of their development. The gastræa is supposed to have arisen from a protozoan colony in the form of a hollow sphere by a gradual deepening of a depression. [< Gr. gastēr (gastr-), stomach.] — gastræa theory, the hypothesis given above. — Gas-træ′a-da, n. pl. Zool. A hypothetical primitive type of animals with the characters of a gastrula. Gas-træ′a-dæ‡.— gas′træ-ad, gas′tre-ad, n.— Gas-træ′a-des, n. pl. Zool. A division of sponges with a persistent gastrula stage, including Haliphysemidæ.— gas-træ′al, a. Pertaining to or resembling the gastræa. gas-tre′al‡.

gas-træ′um, 1 gas-trī′um; 2 găs-trē′ŭm, n. Ornith. The under side of a bird; both the uræum and stethiæum, as opposed to the notæum.

gas′tral, a. Of or pertaining to the stomach or belly; gastric. — gas-tral′gi-a, n. Pathol. Neuralgia in the stomach; gastric pain; bellyache. gas-tral′gy‡.— gas-tra′li-um, n. Spong. A spicule in the gastral wall.— Gas-trech′mi-a, n. pl. Herp. A superfamily or suborder of firmisternial frog-like amphibians having the scapulæ articulating with condyles of exoccipitals, including Hemisidæ.— gas-trech′mi-an, a. & n.— gas″trec-ta′si-a, n. Med. Dilatation of the stomach. gas-trec′ta-sis‡.— gas-trec′to-my, n. Surg. An operation to remove a portion of the stomach.— gas″trel-co′sis, n. Pathol. Ulceration of the stomach.

gas-trep″a-ti′tis, n. Same as GASTROHEPATITIS.

gas′tric, 1 gas′trık; 2 găs′tric, a. Of, pertaining to, or near the stomach. [< L. gaster, < Gr. gastēr, stomach.] — gastric catarrh, same as WATER-BRASH.— g. digestion, the rendering soluble of the food in the stomach by the action of the gastric juices.— g. fever. 1. A bilious remittent fever; harvest-fever. 2. Acute dyspepsia.— g. juice or juices (Physiol.), a thin acid fluid secreted by the glands of the stomach, consisting of dilute hydrochloric and lactic acids with pepsin. It is the chief digestive fluid, acting mainly on proteids.— gas′tri-cism†, n. A medical theory which ascribed diseases to foulness of the stomach or bowels.— gas-tric′o-lous, a. Parasitic in the stomach.

gas-tri′tis, 1 gas-trai′tıs or -trī′tıs; 2 găs-trī′tis or -trī′tis, n. Inflammation of the stomach. [< Gr. gastēr (gastr-), stomach.] — arthritic gastritis, same as GASTROARTHRITIS. — atrophic g. (Pathol.), gastritis which causes an atrophy of the mucous membrane and its secreting glands.— catarrhal g., same as GASTRIC CATARRH.— follicular or glandular g. (Pathol.), inflammation of the gastric glands.— hypertrophic g., a chronic gastritis resulting in a permanent thickening of the mucous membrane.— mycotic g., inflammation due to a fungus in the stomach.— phlegmonous g., a form of gastritis attacking principally the submucous coat of the stomach, and characterized by the presence of abscesses.

gas′tro-, 1 gas′tro-; 2 găs′tro-. From Greek gastēr, stomach or belly: a combining form. See also GASTERO-, GASTR-.— gas″tro-ad″e-ni′tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the gastric glands.— gas″tro-a-nas″to-mo′sis, n. Surg. An operation for the relief of hour-glass contraction of the stomach, by forming a communication between the cardiac and pyloric pouches. gas″tro-gas-tros′to-my‡.— gas″tro-ar-thri′tis, n. Stomachic gout.— gas″tro-bro′sis, n. Pathol. Ulcerous perforation of the stomach.— Gas″tro-cam′py-li, n. pl. Paleon. A subdivision of ammonoid cephalopods containing much-compressed, tightly coiled forms (of the former family Clymenidæ), in which the siphuncle runs along the dorsal side of the body.— gas′tro-cele, n. Pathol. Hernia of the stomach.— gas″tro-cen′trous, a. Zool. Having intercentral pieces between the vertebræ below, as in certain extinct reptiles and amphibians.— gas″tro-ceph″a-li′tis, n. Pathol. Simultaneous inflammation of stomach and brain.— Gas″tro-chæ′ni-dæ, n. pl. Conch. A family of myacean bivalves, especially those having a gaping shell, umbones scarcely prominent, a toothless hinge, and external marginal ligament. Gas″tro-chæ′na, n. (t. g.) — gas″tro-chæ′nid, n.— gas″tro-chæ′noid, a.— gas′tro-chene, n. One of the Gastrochænidæ.— gas″tro-che′nite, n. A fossil of or resembling a gastrochænid.— gas″troc-ne′mi-us, n. [-MI-I, pl.] Anat. A large muscle of the leg that assists in extending the foot. See illus. under MUSCLE.— gas″troc-ne′mi-al, a.— gas′tro-cœl, n. Biol. The archenteron. gas′tro-cœle‡.— gas″tro-cœ′lus, n. [-LI, pl.] Entom. One of a pair of lateral pits at the base of the second abdominal tergite, as in certain ichneumon-flies.— gas″tro-col′ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or attached to the stomach and the transverse colon; as, the gastrocolic omentum.— gas″tro-co-li′tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the stomach and colon.— gas″tro-co-los′to-my, n. Surg. The operation of making an opening between the stomach and colon.— gas″tro-col-pot′o-my, n. Same as GASTRO-ELYTROTOMY.— gas″tro-cys′tis, n. The blastodermic vesicle of a mammal.— gas″tro-cys′tic, a.— gas″tro-di-al′y-sis, n. A sloughing of the coats of the stomach.— gas″tro-di′a-phane, n. A tube furnished with an electric light, used in internal examination of the stomach. — gas″tro-di-aph′a-ny, n. Examination of a patient by means of a gastrodiaphane.— gas″tro-did′y-mus, n. Terat. A double monster united at the abdomen.— gas′tro-disc, n. Embryol. A disk-like plate of cells found at the germinal area during the blastula stage. gas″tro-dis′cus‡.— gas″tro-du″o-de′nal, a. Of or pertaining to the stomach and duodenum.— gas″tro-du″o-de-ni′tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the stomach and duodenum.— gas″tro-du″o-de-nos′to-my, n. Surg. The operation of making an incision between the stomach and duodenum. — gas″tro-dyn′i-a, n. Pathol. Pain in the stomach; gastralgia.— gas″tro-el″y-trot′o-my, *n. Gay''-Lus''sac', 1 gē''-lü''sāk'; 2 gā''-lü''sāk', Joseph Louis (1778—1850), a French chemist and physicist.—

Gay-Lussac alcoholometer, an alcoholometer graduated to show the percentage by volume of alcohol, at a temperature of 15° C.— Gay-Lussac hydrometer, a hydrometer graduated so as to give the specific gravity when the readings are divided by 100.— Gay-Lussac's law, the law formulated on the observation that gases enter into chemical action in simple proportion by volume, the volumes of the participating gases being measured under the same external conditions of pressure and temperature.— Gay-Lussac's tower, see under TOWER.

Gay'lus-sa'ci-a, 1 gē'lu-sā'shi-a or -si-a; 2 gā''lü-sā'shi-a or -ci-a, n. Bot. A large genus of shrubs of the family Vaccinieæ of eastern North and South America, with commonly resinous-dotted leaves, and blue or black edible fruit; the huckleberries. [< Gay-Lussac.]

gay'-yous, 1 gaī'-yous; 2 gā'-yous, n. [Anglo-Ind.] A narrow, flat-bottomed Assamese boat with outrigger, two or three masts with square sails, and movable roof amidships.

Gaz., abbr. Gazette; gazetteer.

Ga'za, 1 gē''za; 2 gā''za, n. Bib. A town 48 m. S. W. of Jerusalem, Palestine, where Titus was defeated by the British, March 27, 1917. [Heb., strong place.]

Gaz'e-bar, 1 gaz'e-bär; 2 gāz'ā-bär, n. Bib. (Douai).

gaz'un-ga-hin', 1 gaz'un-ga-hin'; 2 gāz'ŭn-gā-hīn', n. [Per.] Hebrew manna. See under MANNA.

Ga-za'ni-a, 1 ga-zē''ni-a; 2 ga-zā''ni-a, n. Bot. A considerable genus of South-African plants of the aster family, often cultivated for their large and showy yellow or orange heads. [< Gaza, a Greek scholar in Italy.]

Ga-za'ra, 1 ga-zē'ra; 2 ga-zā'ra, n. Bib. (Apocrypha). Mac. iv, 15.

Ga'zath-ites, 1 gē'za-thaits; 2 gā'zăth-īts, n. pl. Bib. Josh. xiii, 3.

gaze, 1 gēz; 2 gāz, n. [GAZED; GAZ'ING.] I. t. [Rare.] To view attentively; look fixedly and earnestly at.

Where all things gaze themselves, and doubt
If they be in it, or without.
MARVELL Appleton House l. 641.

II. i. To look earnestly and steadily; fix the eyes with intentness or scrutiny, as in admiration or concern.

And still they gazed and still the wonder grew,
That one small head could carry all he knew.
GOLDSMITH Deserted Village l. 215.

[ME. gasen, < Sw. dial. gasa, stare.]— gaz'ing-stock', n. A person or thing gazed at curiously or scornfully; something regarded with wonder or abhorrence. Compare LAUGHING-STOCK.

gaze, n. [< A continued or earnest look, as of admiration, scrutiny, wonder, or curiosity. 2. Something gazed at. gaze'ment.— at gaze. 1. In a gazing attitude; in the act of looking round with fear or apprehension, as a stag on hearing hounds; standing with a staring or watchful gaze. 2. By sight: said of a dog hunting game. 3. Her. Standing with face turned directly from the shield, as a stag.— gaze'hound', n. A hound that hunts by sight rather than by scent; especially, the greyhound.

ga-ze'bo, 1 ga-zī'bo or gaz'i-bō; 2 ga-zē'bo or gāz'ē-bō, n. [-BOS, 1 -bōz; 2 bōs, pl.] 1. A summer-house commanding an extended view; a belvedere. 2. [P.] Anything notably tall, as a building; a tall man. 3. A turret on the roof of a house. 4. A projecting window or balcony. [< GAZE, hinting a Latin form of future sense.]

ga-zelle', formed antelope (genus Gazella) with lyrate or recurved horns, a white streak on each side of the face, and large, mild eyes.

The best-known species is the common gazel (Gazella dorcas) of northern Africa and Arabia, which most closely exhibits the typical characters of the group. Others are the Arabian g. (G. arabica), Grant's g. (G. granti), of East Africa; the Indian g. (G. bennetti), of the Indian peninsula to the Persian gulf; the Isabella g. (G. isabella), of the Red Sea littoral; the Persian g. (G. subgutturosa), of western Asia; and Thomson's g. (G. thomsoni), of British and German East Africa.

Gazel (Gazella dorcas).

No person who has seen the gazelles in confinement . . . can form an idea of the beauty of the animal in its native desert.
BAKER Nile Tribs. Abyssinia p. 33. IMACM. 1886.]

[OF., < Ar. ghazāl, gasel.]— ga-zel'deer'', n. Same as GAZELLE.

gaz'el, n. A poem or piece of music. Same as GHAZAL.

Ga'zer, 1 gē'zər; 2 gā'zər, n. Bib. 2 Sam. v, 25.

Ga-zi'ra, 1 ga-zī'ra; 2 ga-zē'ra, n. Bib. (Apocrypha). 1 Mac. v, 15.

ga-zette', 1 ga-zet'; 2 ga-zēt', vt. [GA-ZET'TED; GAga-zet'te, 1 ZET'TING.] To publish or announce in a gazette, especially an official British gazette; report or announce officially; honor by appointment.

MARK TWAIN in Harper's Monthly Aug., 1891, p. 408.

ga-zette', n. 1. A newspaper, or printed account of current events issued periodically; specif. [C-], the official biweekly government newspaper of London, Edinburgh, or Dublin, containing lists of bankrupts, dissolution of partnerships, and announcements of honors, promotions, and appointments. 2. [Gt. Brit.] Hence, any regular or official announcement or report. [< It. gazzetta; either < gazzetta, dim. of gazza, magpie, or < gazzetta, small coin, < L. gaza, < Gr. gaza, treasure.] ga-zet'-, ga-zet'tist, n. [Rare.] The editor of a gazette.

gaz'et-teer', 1 gaz'e-tir'; 2 gāz'ē-tēr', n. 1. A dictionary of geographical names. 2. A newswriter; an official who publishes news by authority.

We may say that three kinds of men write history:—the gazetteer or annalist, the statesman, and the philosopher.
J. MORLEY Voltaire p. 290. IA. 1872.]

3†. A gazette; newspaper. [< It. gazzettiere, writer of news, < gazzetta; see GAZETTE, n.]— gaz'et-teer'ship, n. The entire body of gazette-writers.— gaz'et-teer'ish, a. Somewhat like a gazetteer, or of a news-writer.— gaz'et-teer'ship, n. The office or employment of a gazetteer.

Gaz'ez, 1 gē'zez; 2 gā'zēz, n. Bib. 1 Chron. ii, 46.

Ga'zites, 1 gē'zaits; 2 gā'zīts, n. pl. Bib. (R. V.). Josh. xiii, 3.

gaz'les, 1 gaz'lz; 2 gāz'lz, n. [Prov. Eng.] The black currant or its fruit; also, the wild plum. gaz'el†; gaz'elst.

Gaz-za'vides, 1 gaz-za'vidz; 2 gāz'ze-vīdz, n. pl. The first Mohammedan dynasty in India, 997–1145.

gaz'o-gene, n. Same as GASOGEN.

gaz'o-lyte, n. Old Chem. One of a class of elements that, as Berzelius supposed, exist in the gaseous form; a member of one of the four classes of Berzelius, the other three being metalloids, metalloids, and halogens. [< F. gazolyte, < gaz, gas, < Gr. gaza, treasure, + lytos, dissolved.]

ga-zon', 1 ga-zūn' or (F.) gā'zōn'; 2 ga-zŭn' or (F.) gā'zōn', n. [F.] Fort. Sod or turf, cut wedge-shaped, for lining the outside of parapets and other earth bank.

gaz''o-phy-la'ci-um, 1 gaz''o-fi-lē'shi-um; 2 gāz''o-fy-lā'shi-um, n. A treasure-house or storehouse; a valuable collection. [< L., < Gr. gazophylakion.] gaz''o-phi-lac'i-, gaz'y, 1 gē'zi; 2 gā'zy, a. [Rare.] 1. Addicted to gazing. 2. Offering a wide prospect; as, a gazy hill.

Gaz'zan, 1 gaz'zan; 2 gāz'zăn, n. Bib. Ezra ii, 48.

gaz-zet'ta, 1 ga-zet'o; 2 ga-zēt'a, n. [It.] See COIN.

GB., abbr. [Stock Market.] Gold bonds.

g. b., abbr. [Slang, U. S.] Grand bounce.

G. B. & I., abbr. Great Britain and Ireland.

G. C., abbr. Grand Chancellor; Grand Chapter; Grand Conductor.

g. c., abbr. Gram calories.

G. C. B., abbr. Grand Cross of the Bath.

g. c. d., abbr. Greatest common divisor.

g. c. f., abbr. Greatest common factor.

G. C. G., abbr. Grand Captain-General; Grand Captain Guard.

G. C. I. E., abbr. Grand Commander of the Indian Empire.

g. c. m., abbr. Greatest common measure.

g. cm.², abbr. Gramcentimeter square. [George.

G. C. M. G., abbr. Grand Cross of St. Michael and St.

G. Com., abbr. Grand Commander; Grand Commandery.

G. C. S. I., abbr. Grand Commander of the Star of India.

G. C. V. O., abbr. Grand Cross of the Royal Victorian Order.

G. C. Z., abbr. Astron. Gould's Cordova Zones.

Gd. Gadolinium: a chemical symbol.

G. D., abbr. Vendon (F. gouvernonp); Grand Duchess; Grand Duke; gravimetric density.

gd., abbr. Good.

G. D. G., abbr. Freemasonry. Grand Director of Ceremonies.

Ge, 1 jī or gē; 2 jē or ge, n. Gr. Myth. Same as GÆA.

Ge. Germanium: a chemical symbol.

ge-, An obsolete prefix of verbs. [Elect.

G. E., abbr. Freemasonry. Grand Encampment; Grand

g. e., abbr. Bookbinding. Gilt edges.

G. Ed., abbr. Vendon (F. gouvernonp); Grand Duchess; Grand Duke; gravimetric density.

Geaner, n. The Old English name for Genoa: applied formerly to objects of Genoese art.

Gē'ant', 1 zē'ōn'; 2 zhē'ŏn', n. 1. A mountain in the Pennine Alps, France; 13,180 ft. high; 4° 1′ m. N. E. of Mt. Blanc. 2. Col de la, a pass between Mts. Géant and Blanc; 11,146 ft. high.

ge-an'ti-cline, 1 jī-an'ti-klain; 2 gē-ăn'tī-clīn, n. Geol. A vast upward flexure of the earth's crust, having sometimes a breadth of hundreds of miles: opposed to geosynclinal. Compare ANTICLINAL.

Flexure implies both upward and downward bendings, geanticlinal and geosynclinal. But the movement is rather to the other.
DANA Geology pt. i, p. 817. (t. n. & co.]

The tents were struck, the mules geared up, and our horses saddled. G. W. UPTON John G. Fremont p. 55. [t. s. r. 1856.]

2. Mech. To put into gear; mesh together; engage; as, to gear cog-wheels.

II. i. Mech. To come into or be in gear; fit into each other; as, those cog-wheels gear accurately.— to gear up, down, or level (Mech.), to arrange a pair of gears or a gear-train so that the speed of the driven part will be (respectively) higher than, less than, or equal to that of the driver.

gear, n. 1. Mech. The moving parts or appliances collectively that constitute some mechanical whole or set, linked, meshing, or fitted together, and commonly serving by their interaction to transmit motion or change its rate or direction; as, the steering-gear of a steamship; a 73½-gear in a bicycle (an arbitrary designation, indicative of speed-capacity, obtained by multiplying the number of teeth in the front sprocket by the diameter in inches of the wheel, and dividing by the number of teeth in the rear sprocket). 2. A gear-wheel.

Gear-wheels.

1. Ordinary form of spur-gears. 2. Bevel-gears. 3. Spur-and crown-gears. 4. Square gears. 5. Frictional gears. 6. Helical and double-helical gears. 7. Elliptical gears. 8. Annular gear.

Gear-wheels or gears are named (1) from their shape or arrangement; as, cam-gear, round-bar, or eccentric; elliptical g., face-g. (having teeth upon the flat surface instead of the rim), miter-g. (a bevel-gear of 45°; see BEVEL-GEAR); or (2) from their use or mechanical construction; thus, change-g. (a change-wheel or set of such wheels), ratchet-g. (having ratchet-teeth and arranged to be driven by a pallet). For other gears, see phrases.

3. The state of being engaged, or fitted with to cause; (2) the capacity of being so fitted together as to act and react harmoniously; a good or fit condition; in mechanics, the state of being in working order.

The position of the workwoman of an engine is called backward g. when such as to drive the engine backward; forward g., when such as to drive the engine ahead; full g., when having or affording the greatest play in a given direction, as full forward g. or full backward g.; mid-g., when such as to cause no motion of the valve, and none of the engine to the crank.

He who makes can also mend His own work if it gets out of gear.
KINGSLEY Out of the Deep p. 56. [MACM. 1880.]

4. Whatever is prepared or arranged for preparation; hence, accouterments or tools, also the tackle of draft-animals. 5. Clothes; apparel; garb.

His servants had gone down the road before him, to be ready in waiting at Pathankote with a change of gear.
KIPLING Plain Tales, Arrest of Lieut. Golightly p. 91. [M. 1.]

6. [Scot. or Obs.] Property; possessions; goods. 7†. Affair; business. 8. Undress; rubbish.— g. and tackle. Worthless stuff; rubbish. [< AS. gearwe (pl.), equipment, < gearu, ready.]— a-light'ing-gear'', n. Aero. Any device consisting of wheels, skids, or a combination of the two, secured to the under side of an aeroplane to absorb shock when alighting and serve as a base when at rest.— annular g., a ring toothed on the inner circumference.— change-speed g. (Auto.), a device for varying the speed of motor vehicles or other machines. This mechanism, when placed in the low-speed notch, gives greater leverage in hill-climbing.— compensating g. 1. Mechanism in the steering-gear of a ship through the agency of which each equal angular change in the position of the rudder can be effected with the same expenditure of work. 2. Same as DIFFERENTIAL GEARING.— cone g., same as CONE DRIVE. See CONE.— conical g., a bevel-gear.— crown g., n. A gear-wheel in which the teeth project at right angles to the plane of the wheel.— differential g., a device—train of few parts capable of producing a high or low velocity ratio, as in a differential pulley. 2. A change-wheel as on a lathe. 3. Same as DIFFERENTIAL GEARING.— differential screw-g., n. Any device for effecting a disengagement of parts; specif. (1) that actuated by the governor which throws out the hook in a Corliss valve-gear, permitting the valve to close; (2) the reversing mechanism in certain types of marine engines.— double-helical g., a gear having double-helical teeth, the uniting of which resembles a herring-bone.— eccentric g., n. A gear-wheel mounted eccentrically. 2. A valve-gear containing eccentrics.— equalizing-g., n. An epicycloidal gear in the driving-mechanism of self-propelled fire-engines to allow the driving-wheels to turn independently of each other.— flanged g., a gear having flanges that engage the sides of its teeth.— shrouded or shrouding g., free g., a gear, as a freewheel, that engages in one direction only.— gear'-box'', n. A box containing or protecting gear-wheels.— g.-case, n. Same as GEAR-BOX. 2. Any protective enclosure round gears.— g.-cutter, n. 1. A serrated disk for cutting gear teeth. 2. A gear-cutting machine. 3. One who cuts gears.— g.-plate, n. Same as GEAR-WHEEL.— g.-rail, n. A series of at least three transmitting gears. See TRAIN. n. 6.— g.-wor't-, g.-wheel, n. A wheel having teeth that may mesh with another toothed wheel or with a toothed rack, etc., to transmit motion. See note under def. 2, above.— half-speed g., an arrangement of mechanism to control or drive an engine at half speed, consisting of two gear-wheels teeth out on the principle of a spiral gear but with shorter pitch, so that they appear practically straight.— herring-bone g., same as double-helical g.— internal g., a gear, same as SPIRAL GEAR.— individual-clutch g., a change-speed gear in which the gears of each set are always in mesh and under the control of an individual clutch, the gears running idly until the clutch is operated.— in full g., with the valve-gear mechanism set to work the valve at full stroke.— inside or internal g., an annular gear.— irregular g., a rotating gear having other than a circular pitch-line.— Joy's g., a valve-gear with no eccentrics, there being link connection between the connecting rod and a pivoted block, which is also connected by a link on the valve-rod. By varying the position of the pin in the slot, the cut-off may be regulated.— knuckle-g., n. Gear provided with knuckle-teeth. See KNUCKLE-TOOTH.— meshing-spur g., same as INDIVIDUAL-CLUTCH GEAR.— mutilated g., a gear-wheel that has teeth on only a portion of its pitch-line.— Obry g. (Arch.), in the Whitehead torpedo, a steering-apparatus in which the action of a gyroscope controls an air-motor which operates the rudder: named from its inventor, Ludwig Obry, an Austrian engineer.— out of g., not in working order.— quick g., a gear which produces a more rapid motion than is necessary to the work.— radial g., a valve gear having radial rods instead of a link motion.— screw g., same as SPIRAL GEAR.— sliding g., a gear which slides along a shaft or axle, and thus can be instantly disconnected; used in pairs in automobiles to control the speed.— spiral g., a gear having teeth arranged spirally or worm-fashion about its circumference.— split g., a gear-wheel made in halves for convenience in mounting on its shaft.— star g., a variable-speed gear, having a lobed periphery suggesting a star.—throw-out g., the mechanism involved in disengaging parts of mechanism; specif., in some types of marine engines, the reversing-mechanism.—variable-speed g., see under VARIABLE.—gear'less, a. Engin. Having the motor armature fitted directly to shaft or axle.

S. S.

geard, pp. Geared.

gear'ing, n. gir'in; 2 gēr'ing, n. 1. Mech. (1) Power-transmitting toothed wheels or racks. (2) Gear in general; working parts; gears collectively. Compare GEAR, 2. Naut. Ropes and tackle.

—angular gearing, toothed gears, other than racks, for transmitting rotary motion with varying velocity; sometimes called bevel-gearing.—differential g., a coupling consisting of an epicyclic train used to connect collinear shafts, as in the driving axle of an automobile, so that a rigid union is effected when moving in a straight line, but permitting of independent motion when describing a curve.—frictional g., see FRICTION-GEARING.—gear'ing-chain'y, n. Gearing.

a, driving bevel gear; b, gear secured to axle; c, differential gears; d, differential pinions.

An endless chain having specially designed links for transmitting power or rotary motion from one toothed wheel to another.—humpage g., a device for changing rotary speed or angular velocity by means of a compound bevel-gear drive.—intermittent g., an arrangement of geared wheels adapted to produce or receive intermittent movements.—watch g., a pair or train of gears in which the gear-wheels are of equal size.—train of g., a gear-train in which the gears may be of any type, such as spur, bevel, or worm, and in which motion is not necessarily transmitted by direct engagement of one gear with another, but may be communicated from a driver gear to a driver by means of a common shaft.

ge-ark'site, i. ge-ärk'sīt; 2 gē-ärk'sīt, n. Mineral. An earthy, white, hydrous aluminum-calcium fluorid ($H_3CaAl(F,OH)_{10}$), resembling kaolin in appearance. [< Gr. gē, earth, + ARKSYTE.]

Gea'ry, n. ji'ri; 2 gē'ry, n. 1. John White (12/29.1819–3/29.1873), a United States general in the Mexican and Civil wars. 2. A county in N. E. central Kansas; 398 sq. m.; county-seat, Junction City.

Ge-as'ter, i. ji-as'tər; 2 gē-ăs'ter, n. Bot. A genus of fungi of the order Lycoperdales — the earth-stars — in which the outer peridium splits when spreading horizontally and presenting the appearance of a conventional star. [< Gr. gē, earth, + astēr, star.] Ge-as'trum‡.

geat, i. ji; 2 gēt, n. 1. The hole in a mold through which the metal is poured in casting. 2. The spout of a type-casting ladle. [Apparently a form of GATE, n., 7.]

Geat, i. yō'-ăt; 2 yō'ăt, n. pl. The Swedish tribe of which Beowulf was a member, and whose king he became.

Ge-au'ga, i. ji-ô'gə; 2 gē-ô'gą, n. A county in N. E. Ohio; 412 sq. m.; county-seat, Chardon.

Ge'ba, i. gē'bə; 2 gē'ba, n. Josh. xxi, 17.

Ge'bal, i. gē'bal; 2 gē'bal, n. Bib. Ps. xxxiii, 7.

Geb'ba-l, i. geb'ə-əl; 2 gēb'a-l, n. Bib. (Douai).

geb'ble, i. geb'l; 2 gēb'l, n. [Scot.] The crop of a fowl; also, the human stomach.

geb'el, n. Same as JEBEL.

Ge'ber, i. gē'bər; 2 gē'ber, n. Bib. 1 Kings iv, 13.

Ge'ber, i. gē'bər or geb'ər; 2 gē'ber or gēb'er, n. Pseudonym of Abu-Mussah-Jaafar-al-Oan, an Arabian alchemist of the 8.h century.

Ge-bel'-al-i, i. ji-bal'-ə-di; 2 gē-bēl'-ă-dē, n. pl. Crust. A family of thalassinidean shrimp-like macrurans. Ge-bel'-a, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. gē, earth, + bios, life.] Ge'bi-dæ‡.—ge'bi-id, n., & a.—ge'bi-oid, a. & n.

Ge'bim, i. gē'bim; 2 gē'bim, n. Bib. Isa. x, 31.

Ge'bir, i. jī'bir or gē'bir; 2 gē'bir or gē'bir, n. In Eastern legend, a prince said to have invaded Africa. Gibraltar was formerly regarded as named after him.

ge-bur', i. gə-bûr' or ye-bûr'; 2 gē-bur' or yē-bur', n. Eng. Hist. In the early English community, a tenant-farmer. See GENEAT.

Ge-bur'ah, i. gə-bûr'ə; 2 gē-bur'ä, n. Occult. See SEPHIRA.

Geb'wel-ler, i. geb'vol-ər; 2 gēb'vl-ler, n. A manufacturing town in Alsace, German Empire.

Ge'car-cin'i-dæ, i. ji'kar-sin'i-di; 2 gē'car-cin'i-dē, n. pl. Crust. A family of grapsoidean crabs having a transverse body without nest-roofing rostrum on the sides, deep orbits with short eyestalks, and unridged palate; landcrabs. Ge-car'ci-nus, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. karkinos, crab.] —ge'car-cin'i-an, ge-car'ci-nid, n.—ge-car'ci-noid, a. & n.

gec'co, i. gek'o; 2 gēc'o, n. 1. A gecko. 2. [C-] Herp. A genus typical of Gecconidæ. [< GECKO.]

Gec-con'i-dæ, i. gec-on'i-di; 2 gēc-ŏn'i-dē, n. pl. Herp. A family of lizards, especially those with biconcave vertebræ, minute scales, and toes with adhesive disks; geckos; wall-lizards.—gec'co-nid, n. & a.—gec'co-noid, a. & n.—Gec-cot'i-dæ, n. pl. Herp. The Gecconidæ.—gec-co'tian, gec'co-tid, gec'co-toid, a. & n.

geck, i. gek; 2 gēc, n. [Eng. & Scot.] To show contempt; toss the head; jeer. Hf. t. To fool; cheat.

geck, n. [Scot. or Obs.] 1. Scorn or derision; a contemptuous toss of the head; jeer. 2. An object of contempt; dupe; guy. Compare GAWK.

geck'o, i. gek'o; 2 gēk'o, n. [-os or -oes, 1 -os; 2 -ōs, pl. 1. A gecconoid lizard; wall-lizard.

This creature has adhesive disks at the ends of its toes through which it is enabled to run up smooth walls and cling to ceilings. The common gecko or wall-lizard (Platydactylus muralis) of southern Europe, the Phyllodactylus xanti of Lower California, and the Sphærodactylus notatus of Florida and Cuba are examples. For the flying gecko, see FLYING, pa.

Gecko (Platydactylus muralis). 1/10

The gecko creeps stealthy and catches from his hollow tree, and utters his harsh gecke. P. H. GOSSE Romance Nat. Hist., NightsSounds p. 28. (t. a. r. 1862.)

2. [C-] The genus Gecco. [Imitative.] —geck'oid, a.

Geck-on-i'dæ, i. gec-on-i'di; 2 gēc-ŏn-i'dē. Same as GECCONIDÆ, etc.—geck-o'tian, a. & n. Gecconoid.

Ged, i. ged; 2 gēd, William (1690–9/11 1749). A Scottish goldsmith and printer who invented stereotyping.

geer', v. & n. Gear,—geer'ling‡, n. Same as GEARING.

geer'ish, n. Same as GIREH. See MEASURE.

Geer-trui'da, n. [D.] See GERTRUDE.

geese, i. gīs; 2 gēs, n. Plural of GOOSE.

geest, i. gīst; 2 gēst, n. Geol. Material derived from rock-decay in situ. 2. High, gravelly land. 3†. Gravel.

Gees'te-mün'de, i. gēs'tə-mün'də; 2 gēs'te-mün'de, n. A seaport town in Hanover province, Prussia.

gee'throw', i. jī'-thrō'; 2 gē'-thrō', n. [U. S.] Lumbering. A massive from-pointed wheel.

Ge-ez', i. gi-ez' or gīz; 2 gē-ēz' or gēz, n. [Ethiopic.] The ancient still used as a liturgical and literary language. See ABYSSINIAN. Ge-es'ti‡. Ghe-ez'‡. Gi-ez'‡.—Geez Version (of the Bible), see GHEZ.

gee'zer, i. gī'zər; 2 gē'zer, n. [Slang.] An old or elderly person: a derisive designation.

Gef'jon, i. gef'yon; 2 gĕf'yŏn, n. Norse Myth. A maiden goddess, to whom all who die maids become maid servants. In the Younger Edda is told a beautiful story about her, relating to the origin of the Danish island Zealand. Gef'jun‡. Gef'ion‡. Gef'yon‡. Gef'yun‡.—Gef'le, n. A seaport town in Sweden; 7,418 sq. m.; capital, Gefle, a fortified seaport.

ge'gen-schein, i. gē'gen-shain; 2 gē'gĕn-shīn, n. [G.] Astron. A faint, luminous spot observable at night on the ecliptic, 180° from the sun: possibly due to reflection from many asteroids or similar bodies.

geg'ger, i. geg'ər; 2 gĕg'er, n. [Archaic, Scot.] The under lip.

Ge'har'a-shim, Ge'ha-har'a-shim, n. Same as CHARASHIM.

Ge'hel, i. gi-hel'zəi; 2 gē-hĕl'zī, n. Bib. 2 Kings iv, 12.

Ge-hen'na, i. gi-hen'ə; 2 gē-hĕn'a, n. 1. The place of future torment; hell; hell-fire; originally, the valley of Hinnom near Jerusalem, the place where the city offal was burned, and kept burning for centuries. 2. A prison or torture-chamber. [LL., < Gr. Geenna, Heb. gē-hinnōm, valley of Hinnom.] —Ge-hen'ni-cal, a.

Ge-hi'nom, i. gi-hai'nəm; 2 gē-hī'nŏm, n. [Heb.] The valley of Hinnom. See GEHENNA.

geh'len-ite, i. gē'lən-ait; 2 gē'lĕn-īt, n. Mineral. A resinous aluminous silicate ($Ca_2Al_2SiO_8$), crystallizing in the tetragonal system. [< Gehlen, Chemiker, German chemist.]

Ge'hy-droph'i-la, i. ji'hai-drof'i-lə; 2 gē'hī-drŏf'i-la, n. pl. Conch. A superfamily or suborder of stylommatophorous pulmonates with lophine integuments, mostly amphibious or living on the seashore, including Auriculidæ and Otinidæ. [< Gr. gē, earth, + hydōr (hydr-), water, + phileō, love.] —ge'hy-droph'il-an, n.—ge'hy-droph'i-lous, a.

ge'ic, i. jī'ik; 2 gē'ic, a. Chem. Of or pertaining to the brown or black substance or mixture of substances produced by the oxidation of humic matter. [Gr. gē, earth.]—geic acid, same as HUMIC ACID. ge'in‡; ge'line‡.

geig, i. jig; 2 gēg, vi. [North. Eng. & Scot.] Same as CREAK.

Gei'ger, i. gai'gər; 2 gī'ger, Lazarus (2/21829–9/21870). A German philologist.

gei'ger-tree'', i. gai'gər-trī''; 2 gī'ger-trē'', n. A small tree (Cordia sebestena) of the borage family, of tropical America, having dark, heavy wood.

Gei'jer, i. yē'yer; 2 yē'yer, Erik Gustaf (1/21783–4/21847). A Swedish poet and historian.

Gei'ki, i. gē'ki, n. Same as GEIKIE, n.

Gei'kie, i. gē'ki; 2 gē'kī, n. 1. Sir Archibald (12/1835–11/11 1924), a British geologist and writer; scientist; Dir.-Gen. of the Geological Survey. 2. James (5/21839–4/11915), a Scottish geologist and author; brother of Sir Archibald.

geil'kie-lite, i. gī'ki-lait; 2 gē'kĭ-līt, n. Mineral. A metallic bluish-black manganesian titanite ($MnTiO_3$), that crystallizes in the hexagonal system. [< Sir A. Geikie.]

geilli, i. jil; 2 gēl, n. [North. Eng. & Scot.] Jelly.

ge-i'ra, i. gē-ī'rə; 2 ghē'ĭ-ra, n. [Pg.] See MEASURE.

Geir'rod, i. yai'rod; 2 yī'rŏd, n. Norse Myth. A foster-son of Odin. Odin assumes the name of Gimner and visits him, but is treated so inhospitably that he foretells the death of Geirrod who, finally, is killed by his own sword. 2. A giant who locked Loki in a chest for three months, and was pierced by Thor with a red-hot wedge. He represents the intense heat producing thunder-storms. Geir'röthr‡.

geis, i. gesh or gēsh; 2 ghēsh or ĝesh, n. Ir. [Ir.] GRAS'A, 1 gis'a; 2 ĝăs'a, pl.) An obligation of honor, generally restrictive, attaching to a rank, order, or individual in the ancient Irish aristocracy.

Every man who entered the Fenian ranks had four geasa laid upon him. 'The first never to marry a woman with a wife, but to choose her for good manners and virtues; the second, never to offer violence to any woman; the third, never to refuse any one for anything he might possess; the fourth, that no single warrior should ever flee before nine [i. e., before less than ten] champions.' J. DOUGLAS HYDE Hist. Irish Lit. p. 373. (r. r. v. '06.)

geis'ha, i. gē'shə; 2 ghē'sha, n. Jap. A Japanese girl especially trained to furnish entertainment at convivial and social gatherings, by her posturing, dancing, and playing.

gei'son, i. gai'sən; 2 gī'son, n. [Gr.] The projecture of the cornice eaves of a Greek or Greco-Roman building beyond the vertical plane of the wall; specif., the ledge or shelf at the base of a pediment, formed by the horizontal cornice: often used of the cornice itself. The gisson of the Parthenon is nearly three feet in depth.

gei'so-therm, i. gī'si-sō-thûrm; 2 gī'ĭ-so-thêrm, n. Phys. Geog. Same as ISOCHEIMENE. gei'so-ther'mal, a.

Geiss'ler, i. gais'lər; 2 gĭs'ler, Heinrich (3/21814–4/21879). A German mechanician and physicist; inventor of an air-pump, tubes (see TUBE), and other important apparatus.

Geis'so-lo'ma, i. gai'so-lō'mə; 2 gī'so-lō'ma, n. Bot. A monotypic genus of South-African low shrubs, constituting the family Geissolomaceæ. The only species, G. marginatum, is characterized by imbricated perianth-lobes, 3 stamens, and pendulous ovules. [< GEISSON + LOMA.]

Geis'so-lo-ma'ceæ, i. gai'so-lo-mē'si-ē; 2 gī'so-lo-mā'ce-ē, n. pl. Bot. A monotypic family of shrubs. See GEISSOLOMA.

Geis'so-rhi'za, i. gai'so-rai'zə; 2 gī'so-rī'za, n. Bot. A genus of African iridaceous herbs, with linear, plaited, narrow setaceous or sword-shaped leaves, and simple or branched stem bearing large showy flowers in one-sided spikes. Several are in cultivation. [< Gr. geisson, roof.]

geis'so-sper'min, i. gai'so-spûr'm ən; 2 gī'so-spêr'mĭn, n. Chem. A white crystalline alkaloid ($C_{13}H_{21}N_3O_2 + H_2O$), obtained from the bark of Geissospermum leave. geis'sine‡; geis'so-sper'mine‡.

Geis'so-sper'mum, i. gai'so-spûr'məm; 2 gī'so-spêr'mŭm, n. Bot. A genus of tropical South-American trees of the family of pocynaceæ. It contains but the two known species, the more important one, G. laeve, having a tonic febrifugal bark. [< Gr. geisson, hem, + sperma, seed.]

geist, i. gaist; 2 gīst, n. [G.] Spirit, hence, inspiring or dominating principle, as of an age. Compare ZEITGEIST.

gei'te, i. jī'ait; 2 gē'tĕ, n. The matter composing the nucleus of the earth: a proposed name. [< Gr. gē, earth.]

geit'je, i. nit'ye; 2 nĭt'ye, n. [D.] 1. A gecconoid lizard of South Africa (Pachydactylus mariquensis) popularly reputed venomous, but actually harmless. 2. A little gecko.

gel'to-nog'a-my, i. gal'to-nog'ə-mi; 2 gĕl'to-nŏg'a-my, n. Bot. Fertilization of a flower by pollen from another flower of the same plant. [< Gr. gelōn, neighbor, + gamos, marriage.] —gel'to-no-gam'ic, gel'to-nog'a-mous, a.

gel'zen, vt. See GIZZEN.

gel, i. jel; 2 gĕl, vt. Biol. To set into a protoplasmic aggregation of tissue: congulate by coagulating jelly: congulate protoplasm of nerves. [< L. gelo, freeze.]

gel, n. Biol. Protoplasm comprising gelatin or albumen in a jelly-like state; a colloidal substance in a congulated condition forming protoplasmic nerve-material. See HYDROGEL. When formed of gelatin it will redissolve by heating, and is then called reversible gel. Egg-albumen forming protoplasm, not being thus resoluble, is called irreversible gel.

Ge'la, i. gē'lə; 2 gē'la, n. An ancient city in Sicily; founded 690 B. C.

gel'a-ble, i. jel'ə-bl; 2 gĕl'a-bl, a. [Rare.] Capable of being congealed or jellied. [< L. gelo; see -BLE.]

—gel'a-bil'i-ty, n.

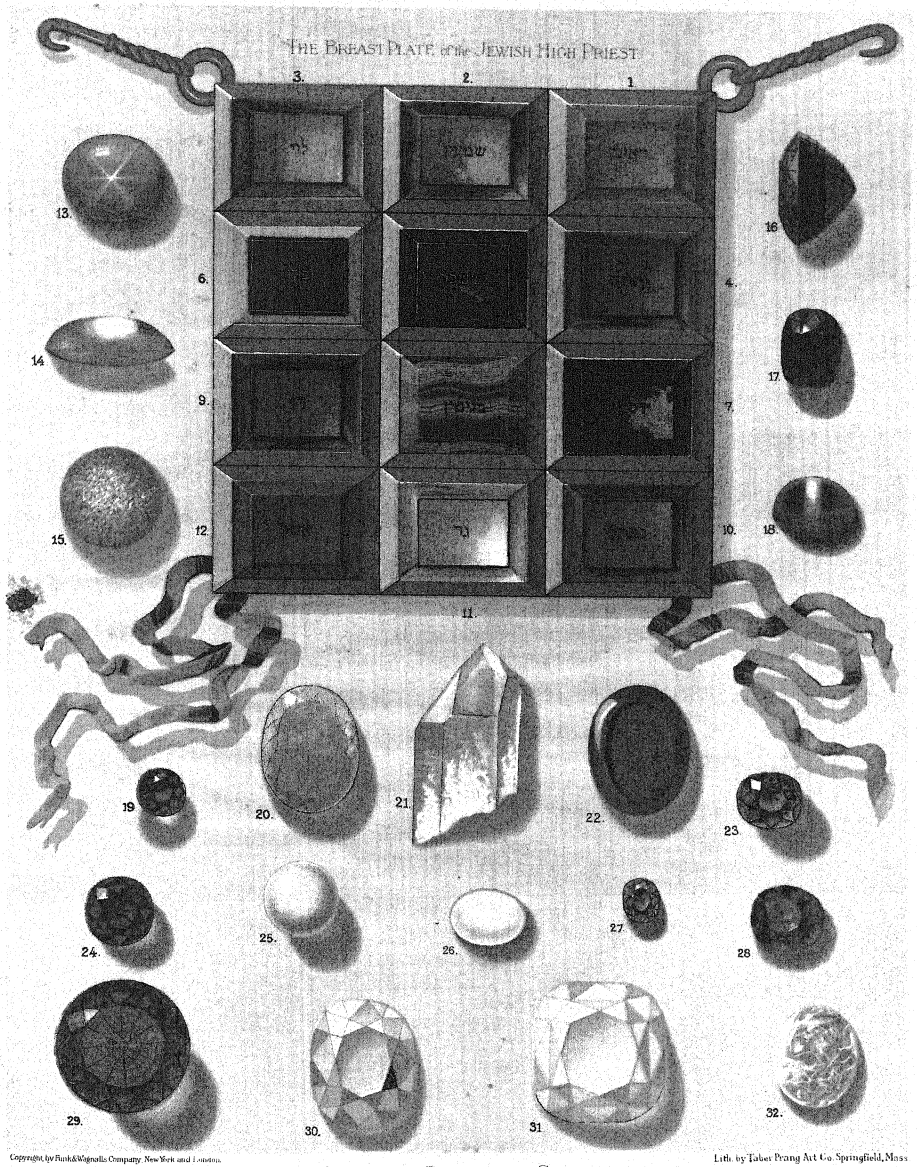
gel'a-da, i. jel'ə-də; 2 gĕl'a-da, n. (Abys.) An Abyssinian baboon (Theropithecus gelada), having the nostrils not terminal, a heavy brown mane, and a tufted tail.



Gelada. 1/10

ge-las'tan, i. ji-las'tən; 2 gē-lăs'tan, n. A jelly-like mass in cold water, but dissolves in hot water. Gelatin does not exist free in animal tissues, but is formed by the action of hot water. It is used in various forms, as glue, size, and isinglass, also as a food but it is not a perfect dietary substitute for proteids. It forms the base of various bacteriological cultures, and is employed in different photographic processes.

Connective Tissue . . . contains gelatine—the matter which tans when hide is made into leather.

—JAS. GEIKIE Geomorphological Geology pt. 1, p. 36. (r. 1880.)

[< F. gélatine, < L. gelatus, pp. of gelo, freeze, < gelu, frost.] —chromatized gelatin, gelatin compounded with bichromate of potassium.—explosive g., blasting-gelatin. See BLASTING.—fluid g., oleate of aluminum, a putty-like substance used for thickening lubricating oils.—formaldehyde g. (Chem.), a coarse powder, pale-brown and odorless, derived by evaporation from a solution of gelatin treated with formalin. Under certain conditions it gives off free formaldehyde.—g. of Florkowsky (Bacteriol.), a medium proposed for the cultivation of typhoid bacilli, consisting of 33 grams of gelatin and 5 grams of peptone to 1 liter of normal urine.—g. paper, paper gelatinized, as for use in photography.—g. plate (Phot.), a plate prepared with gelatin emulsion. See DRY PLATE.— g. process. 1. A photo-engraving process in which a negative is made on a gelatin film containing a bichromate, as of potassium or ammonium. The gelatin is hardened and made insoluble by the action of light, and the portions not so acted on may be swelled by water (the swell process) or washed away (the wash-out process), after which a cast is taken, making a relief-printing plate, as in the Moss process, or the gelatin film itself may be used in printing, as in the artotype. 2. A method of copying and multiplying a writing or drawing by tracing or impressing the original on paper, in an oily, diffusible anilin ink, then transferring this to a surface of a compound of gelatin, glycerin, etc. The coloring-matter sinks into the gelatin surface, which may be used as a printing-surface by simple pressure of paper against it, as with the hand. See ENGRAVING.— g. relief (Phot.), an image formed in relief on a gelatin film.— g. sugar, same as GLYCOCOLL.— glyc′erin-gel″a-tin, n. Bacteriol. A mixture of gelatin and glycerin, used as a culture-medium for bacteria.— Japanese g., agar-agar.— nutrient g., a mixture of bouillon gelatin and a nourishing substance, as bouillon used as a culture-medium for bacteria.— vegetable g., same as GLIADIN.— wort-g., n. A nutrient gelatin prepared with a malt-infusion.— gel″a-tig′e-nous, a. Yielding or producing gelatin. gel″a-tin-if′er-ous‡.— gelatigenous tissue, connective animal tissue yielding gelatin when boiled with water.— ge-lat′i-nase, n. A vegetable ferment capable of dissolving gelatin. — gel″a-tin′i-form, a. Having gelatin-like properties or character.— gel″a-tin′i-fy, vt. To make gelatinous.— Gel″a-ti-nig′er-a, n. pl. Protoz. An order of infusorians with cell-units secreting a gelatinous investment, and forming large colonies.— gel″a-tin-ig′er-ous, a. 1. Gelatigenous. 2. Of or pertaining to the Gelatinigera.— gel″a-tin′i-ty, n. The state of being gelatinous.— ge-lat′i-nize or -nise, vt. 1. To gelatinate. 2. To treat or overlay with gelatin.— ge-lat″i-niz′a-bl(eP, a. Capable of being or of becoming gelatinized.— gel″a-tin″o-bro′mid, gel″a-tin″o-chlo′rid, a. Phot. Of or pertaining to that which, as a film or an emulsion, is sensitized by a bromid or chlorid in a vehicle of gelatin.— gel″a-tin-og′ra-phy, n. The process of printing from gelatin-relief plates.— gel″a-tin′o-type, n. 1. The process of printing from a gelatin-relief. 2. A print, as of a newspaper illustration, made in this way.

ge-lat′i-nate, 1 jı-lat′ı-nēt; 2 ġe-lăt′i-nāt (XIII), v. [-NAT″ED; -NAT″ING.] I. t. To convert into a jelly-like substance. II. i. To become changed into gelatin or a gelatin-like mass.— ge-lat″i-na′tion, n. The act or process of converting or being converted into gelatin or a jelly-like substance. ge-lat″i-fi-ca′tion‡; ge-lat″i-ni-za′[o-r sa′]tion‡.— ge-lat′i-noid. I. a. Gelatiniform; jelly-like. II. n. A gelatin-like substance.— ge-lat″i-no′sa, n. Anat. A collection of neuroglia near the apex of the posterior horn of the spinal cord.— gel″a-tin″o-sul′fur-ous or -phur-ous, a. Chem. Composed of gelatin and sulfur.

ge-lat′i-nous, 1 jı-lat′ı-nus; 2 ġe-lăt′i-nŭs, a. Consisting of or of the nature of gelatin; similar to jelly.

When first perceptible, the muscles are gelatinous, pale, yellowish, transparent, and indistinguishable from their tendons.
SPENCER Biology vol. i, pt. ii, p. 141. [A. 1872.]

ge-la′tion, 1 jı-lē′shən; 2 ġe-lā′shon, n. Solidification, especially by cooling.

RUSKIN Deucalion vol. i, p. 44. [G. A. 1879.]

Gel-bo′e, 1 gel-bō′ı; 2 gĕl-bō′e, n. Bib. (Douai).

geld, 1 geld; 2 gĕld, vt. [GELD′ED or GELT; GELD′ING.] 1. To castrate; emasculate: said especially of horses. 2. To remove the old comb from: said of a beehive. 3. [Prov. SHAKESPEARE Othello act iv, sc. 2.

gen'der,] n. 1. Gram. (1) A property of certain words whereby they indicate the sex or lack of sex of that which they represent. In English gender is expressed by endings (as emperor, empress; widow, widower; he, hit, > it), by qualifying words or prefixes as man, woman (he wolf, she wolf; man servant, maid servant; tom-cat), or by words exclusively used for males or females, especially in pairs (as, father, mother; son, daughter; he, she); and any object may be spoken of in gender by using for it gender-pronouns. Some neuters have a second gender of this kind: sun, masculine; ship, feminine. Animals distinguished by distinct names for male and female are given in the following list: buck, doe; boar, sow; bull, cow; cock, hen; colt, filly; dog, bitch; drake, duck; fox, vixen; gander, goose; grandsire, grandam; hart, roe; horse, mare; milter, spawner; ram, ewe; ruff, reese; stre, dam; stag, hind; steer, heifer.

Many languages have gender-forms for adjectives, pronouns, and articles, which agree with the nouns they qualify; so also verbs in some languages. Some tongues have many sets or forms of this sort which are called genders; some have but two, as the Semitic masculine and feminine, and irrational objects. The Indo-European languages distinguished three genders originally, the Semitic two; so also French now classes all nouns as masculine or feminine.

Words that have the same form for the masculine and feminine are said to be of common gender. The grammatical g. of a word is the gender assigned it by grammatical usage as masculine, feminine, the fox; the natural g. of a word is that which corresponds to the sex or lack of sex of the thing for which it stands.

2. [Colloq. or Humorous] Sex; as, two persons of the feminine gender. 3†. A kind; genus. [< OF. gendre, kind, < L. genus; see GENUS.] gen'dret.

SYN.: sex. Sex is a distinction among living beings: it is also the characteristic by which most living beings are distinguished from inanimate things, which are of no sex; gender is a distinction in language partially corresponding to this distinction in nature; while there are but two sexes, there are in some languages, as in English and German, three genders. We speak of the masculine or feminine gender, the male or female sex.

gen'er-al, a. 1. Of or pertaining to a genus or kind; pertaining in common to all, as of a class, group, order, or community; as, a general direction.

So spake our general mother. MILTON P. L. bk. iv, l. 492.

2. Pertaining to the majority; common to the greater number but not to all; true of a large number or proportion; wide-spread or prevalent, as distinguished from universal; as, a general practice; general rainfall. 3. (1) Lacking in exactness, meaning, or connotation; not restricted in application or jurisdiction: opposed to particular or special; hence, indefinite or vague; as, a general examination. (2) Universal, or applicable to all the elements, individuals, or objects, sections, or judgments, within a given group or class. In this meaning the highest laws of the positive sciences are general, because they are generalizations framed to cover all the individuals with which science has thus far become acquainted.

In this sense general is used in official titles commonly but illogically written as compounds, the adjective being the last element, in imitation of French usage; as, attorney-general; postmaster-general. Owing to this position of the adjective, it is sometimes mistaken for the noun, and the officials so named are improperly given the title of general.

4. Usual or customary; as, one's general habit. 5. Viewed all together, or as a whole; taken all in all; as, one's general behavior. 6. [Archaic.] Related to public or daily affairs; common and vulgar. [OF., < L. generalis, of or belonging to a kind, < genus (gener-); see GENUS.]

SYN.: common, universal. Universal applies to all, without exception; general applies to all with possible or comparatively slight exceptions; common applies to very many without deciding whether they are even a majority. A common remark is one we often hear; a general experience is one that comes to the majority of people; a universal experience is one from which no human being is exempt. It is dangerous for a debater to affirm a universal proposition, since that can be negatived by a single exception, while a general statement is not invalidated even by adducing many exceptions. We say a common opinion, common experience, a general rule, a universal law.—ANT.: exceptional, infrequent, rare, singular, uncommon, unknown, unusual.

—general agent, in law, one appointed to a principal to act for him in all his affairs or in all affairs of a particular class.—G. Court, the official name of the legislature in Massachusetts and New Hampshire.—g. dealer, a shopkeeper who deals in all kinds of goods.—g. epistle, an epistle addressed to the whole church; a catholic epistle.—g. failure of issue, lack of issue to succeed to an estate occurring at no definite period fixed by the devise.—g. gaudes, two sergeants placed to the right and left of a line of troops to preserve accuracy in marching.—g. issue, the issue formed by a general denial of the plaintiff's allegations.—g. officer, a military officer having rank above a colonel.—g. orders, in military parlance, orders from headquarters to be made known to and affecting generally the whole command.—g. practitioner, any physician not a specialist.—g. term, in logic, a term that is the sign of a general conception.—g. name.—g. verdict, a verdict that finds simply for the plaintiff or for the defendant when a general issue has been joined.—g. warrant, formerly, a warrant (now illegal) for the arrest of suspected persons without specifically mentioning names.

A general warrant to apprehend all persons suspected, without naming or particularly describing any person in special, is illegal and void for its uncertainty.

BLACKSTONE Commentaries bk. iv, p. 291.

gen'er-al, n. 1. Mil. An officer who commands an army or any body of troops not below a brigade; an officer with a chief or general command; the highest military officer ordinarily commonly with a word prefixed indicating the rank. See BRIGADIER; LIEUTENANT-GENERAL; MAJOR-GENERAL; MARSHAL.

In the United States the title of general (without qualifying word) has at times been created by a special law, and conferred only on the acting commander-in-chief of the armies. It has been held by George Washington, Ulysses W. T. Sherman and Sheridan. It is now held by Tasker Howard Bliss, John Joseph Pershing, and Peyton Conway March. In the armies of Europe this grade is usually the highest except that of marshal or field-marshal. [erale½ [F.].

2. Mil. A roll of the drum to call troops together. gen'eral of the General' is the signal for packing up, striking tents, and loading the wagons for marching.

ELIZABETH B. CUSTER Following the Guidon p. 7. [n. 1880.]

BLACKSTONE Commentaries bk. i, p. 262.

gen'er-al-ist,] jen'ər-al-ist; 2 ĝĕn'ĕr-al-ist, n. One whose studies, interests, and information are extensive or widely distributed; one not a specialist.

gen'er-al-i-ty,] jen'ər-al'i-ti; 2 ĝĕn'ĕr-al'i-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiz, pl.] 1. The bulk or main body; the principal portion; majority; as, the generality of voters. 2. Anything general, impractical, or not specific; especially, a vague general statement or expression; as, to deal in generalities.

The sentence was a string of vague generalities, intolerably long. MONTHLY John of Barneveld vol. ii, p. 356. [n.]

3. The state or quality of being general or generalized.

Scientific knowledge is characterized by certainty, exactness, and generality. SULLY Hand-book of Psych. p. 16. [n. 1887.]

4. Formerly, in France, a tax-district.

5†. pl. The affairs or interests of a person or community.

ADAM SMITH Wealth of Nations vol. ii, p. 465. [n. r.]

5†. pl. The affairs or interests of the general public. 6†. A district governed by a general. [< F. généralité, < LL. generalita (t-)s, < L. generalis; see GENERAL.] gen'er-al-ty† [Rare].

gen'er-al-i-za'tion,] jen'ər-al-i-zā'shən; 2 ĝĕn'ĕr-al-i-zā'shon, n. 1. The process or act of generalizing; thinking in terms of the concept or schematized idea.

Generalization is a term employed to denote that the modified idea which results from thinking has become capable of being applied, with equal propriety, to a number of sufficiently similar objects.

G. T. LADD Psychol. Descrip. and Explan. p. 436. [n.]

2. The result of generalizing; a notion, rule, or law derived by analysis of individual examples or instances; a general inference; an induction.

One of the most striking generalizations of recent science is that even LAWS have their Law.

DRUMMOND Natural Law intro., p. 37. [r. p. 1888.]

3. Math. The process of obtaining a law of wider scope by dropping some specific characteristic of a subject or antecedent term. 4. Pathol. The spread throughout the system of a diseased condition which began as a local disorder. gen'er-al-ea'tion†.

gen'er-al-ize,] jen'ər-al-iz; 2 ĝĕn'ĕr-al-iz, v. [-IZED; -IZ'ING.] I. t. 1. To reduce to a genus or to genera; consider as belonging to a general class; treat so as to obtain a general principle; as, to generalize facts. 2. To apply generally or more generally; use with a wider meaning; make of universal application; as, to generalize a term; to generalize a mathematical problem.

The axioms (of geometry) are generalized statements of self-evident truths. ALDEN Intell. Philos. p. 208. [A. 1866.]

3. To infer (a general rule or law) from particulars or single facts. 4. To popularize; bring into general use. 5. Painting. To depict general characteristics rather than individual peculiarities. 6. Pathol. To change from a localized into a general disease.

II. i. 1. To form objects into genera or classes; form general ideas or notions.

The mind begins to generalize as soon as it knows that several perceived objects are different as individuals, and yet not in any one respect alike. PORTER Human Intellect p 383. [a. 1890.]

gen'er-ate, v. 1. Math. Same as GENERATRIX. 2. Anything that generates or begets.

gen'er-ate, 1 jen'er-et; 2 ğĕn'er-ĕt, a. [-an"ep; -an"tep.] 1. To produce or cause to exist; bring forth; bring into being; originate; create; as, filth generates disease. 2. To bring into being as a parent; beget; procreate.

Every part of the candor of an ingrafted tree, and consequently of all trees, can generate or produce a new plantula. ERASMUS DARWIN Zoonomia vol. ii, p 284. [c. r 1801.]

3. Math. To trace by motion; as, a point generates a line, or a line a surface. [< L. generatus, pp. of genero, beget, < genus, see GENUS.]

gen'er-a'tion, 1 jen'er-ĕ'shon; 2 ğĕn'er-ĕ'shon, n. 1. The process, act, or function of begetting or procreating; reproduction; propagation.

The conservation of the species by generation after its kind seems natural because we are accustomed to it, but is really as mysterious as would be the continuity of the individual force.

HOSKINS Power of Mind p. 252. [a. 1813.]

2. Production or origination by any process; a bringing into being; a giving rise; creation; as, the generation of electricity; the generation of crime. 3. A step or degree in natural descent; also, all the persons conceived in the same degree from an ancestor; hence, the body of persons existing at the same time or period; as, unto the third generation. 4. Petrol. The body of crystals, of one or more mineral species, in an igneous rock, that separates from the magma during the same period of its cooling and solidification. 5. The average lifetime of the persons in a community: commonly estimated as coincident of a century.

It is upon the bright things of life we must fix our gaze if we would be of use in our day and generation.

CARNEGIE Round the World p. 313. [a. 1884.]

6. Math. The formation of a geometrical magnitude by the motion of a point, line, or surface. 7. Race or family; stock or breed; kind, class.

For they descent thee, and thine, a low and inconsiderable generation. BUNYAN Works, Grace Abounding p 29. [b. o. & co.]

8. That which is generated or begotten; progeny; offspring 9. Theol. (1) The name given to the relation between the Father and the Son in the Trinity. [Archaic.] Nobleness of birth and lineage; by extension, the nobility of character once assumed to be a necessary heritage of those nobly born.

The Virginians especially lay claim to this generosity of lineage. LOWELL Among My Books second series, p. 3. [1870.]

gen'er-ous, 1 jen'or-us; 2 ğĕn'er-ŭs, a. 1. Giving or bestowing heartily and munificently; freely and self-sacrificingly liberal; munificent; as, a generous contribution. 2. Of noble or honorable birth; high-bred; high-minded; as, a generous nature. 3. Characterized by fulness or liberality; abundant; overflowing; large; bountiful; as, generous fare. 4. Of good descent; well gifted or favored by circumstances. Hence, noble-spirited; courageous; mettlesome; as, a generous steed. 5. Having stimulating qualities; strong; as, generous wine. [OF., < L. generosus, < genus; see GENUS.]

SYN. bountiful, munificent, princely, free, free-handed, liberal, magnanimous, munificent, noble, open-handed, open-hearted. As regards giving, generous refers rather to the disposition or nature of the giver, liberal to the amount of the gift; a child may show himself generous in the gift of an apple, a millionaire makes a liberal donation; a generous gift, however small, is commended for both ample and hearty. A munificent gift is vast in amount, whatever the motive of its bestowal. One may be free with another's money; he is generous only with his own. Disinterested suggests rather the thought of one's own self-denial; generous, of one's hearty interest in another's welfare or happiness. One is magnanimous by a greatness of soul that rises above injury or insult; he is generous by a kindness of heart that would rejoice in the welfare rather than in the punishment of the offender. See ABUNDANT.— ANT. ignoble, illiberal, illiberal, miserly, parsimonious, petty, stingy.— gen'er-ous-ly, adv.— gen'er-ous-ness, n.

gen'try, 1 jen'trĭ; 2 gĕn'tryi, n. 1. People of good position or birth; people of means and leisure; specif., in England, the upper class exclusive of the nobility. See GENTLEMAN.

In their general tone of character, the lowland aristocracy of Virginia resembled the cultivated landed gentry of the mother country. RANDALL Thomas Jefferson vol. i, p. 4, fn. a. [A. 1858.]

2. Any class of people: commonly an ironical term; as, light-fingered gentry (pickpockets). 3†. Gentle birth or condition. 4†. Good breeding; affability. 5†. A noble act or quality. 6†. Birth; family. [< OF. gentrise, < gentil; see GENTLE.] gen'trie†.

Gen'try², n. A county in N. W. Missouri; 492 sq. m.; county-seat, Albany.

gen'ty, 1 jen'tĭ; 2 gĕn'tĭ, a. [Scot.] Of elegant form; trim; jaunty.

ge'nu, 1 jī'nū; 2 gē'nū, n. [GEN'U-A, 1 jen'yu-ə; 2 gĕn'yu-ə, pl.] [L.] The knee, or a knee-like structure, as a bend of the corpus callosum of the brain.— genu recurvatum (Pathol.), a malformation of the knee in which the angle at the joint is reversed, opening in front instead of behind.— g. valgum, incurvature of the knees; knock-knee. g. introrsum; g. inversum; — g. varum, outcurvature of the legs at the knee. — g. arcuatum; g. eversum; g. excurvatum†; g. extrorsum; — gen'u-al. 1. a. Of or pertaining to the genu or knee. II. n. The fourth joint of a spider's leg.— gen'u-ate, a. Her. Kneeling.— gen'u-clast, n. A surgical instrument for forcibly separating adhesions in the knee-joint.— gen"u-cu'bi-tal, a. Surg. Resting on knees and elbows: said of a posture in operation. — gen'u-flect, vt. To kneel, as in worship.— gen"u-flec-ten'tes, n. pl. Catechumens in the early church who remained after the audients were dismissed.— gen"u-flec'tion, n. A bending of the knee, especially in worship. gen"u-flec'tor, n.— gen"u-flec'tor, n.— gen"u-flec'to-ry, a.— gen"u-flex'u-ous, a. Bot. Geniculately bent. [20. Ge-nu'bath,] ja-nū'bath; 2 gē-nū'bath, n. Bib. I Kings xi. gen'u-ine,] jen'yu-in; 2 gĕn'yu-in, a. 1. Belonging to gen'u-ine, the original or true stock; having the character or origin represented; not false, factitious, or adulterated; as, genuine art. 2. Written by the author whose name it bears; said of a writing; not counterfeit or pretended; real. Compare AUTHENTIC. 3. Zoöl. Typical; not aberrant from type. 4. Natural; free from true character and feelings in speech and action; not affected or hypocritical; frank; true; as, his manner was genuine. [< L. genuinus, innate, < gen(t-)s, race, < gigno, beget.] Syn.: see ACTUAL; AUTHENTIC; HONEST; PURE.— gen'u-in-(e-)ly, adv. — gen'u-in-(e-)ness, n. The quality of being genuine, especially of having been produced by its reputed author: to be distinguished from authenticity (which see below).

The genuineness of the leading Epistles of Paul has not been questioned at the present day by the most learned skeptics.

gen"u-pec'to-ral,] jen"yu-pek'to-ral; 2 gĕn'yu-pĕk'to-ral, a. Surg. Resting on knees and chest, as in a position for an operation.

ge'nus,] jī'nus; 2 gē'nŭs, n. [GEN'E-RA,] jen'ĭ-ro; 2 gĕn'ĕ-ra, pl.] 1. Biol. A classificatory group of animals or plants embracing one or more species.

Usually, in classification, a genus is the rank next above a species and next below a subfamily. The generic and specific names constitute the scientific name of an animal or plant, the generic name standing first and being written with a capital letter; thus, Equus caballus is the horse, and Quercus alba is the white oak.

2. Logic. (1) A class of similars divisible into two or more subordinate classes, or species.

A genus may be a species with reference to a higher genus and a species may be a genus in relation to lower species. The summum genus, or highest genus, according to any classificatory system is that which includes all the other classes and is not itself included in any; an infimum species is that which is divided only into individuals; and which therefore is not a genus in relation to any other species. Intermediate or subaltern genera and species are those subordinate to the summum genus and superordinate to the infima species. The genus immediately superordinate to any particular species is the proximate. (2) The nature or system of characters by which distinguishable members of a comprehensive class. 3. Mus. A kind or class, particularly of scales; as, the diatonic, chromatic, and enharmonic genera. [L., origin, < √ gen of gigno, beget.]

— genus of a curve (Math.), the number of a curve's intersections with some other that can be induced by other specific intersections with that other. It can not exceed $½ (m - 1) (m - 2)$, where m is the order of the curve.

-geny, suffix. Production. [< L. -genia, < Gr. -geneia, < √ gen in gignomai, become.]

Geo., abbr. George; Georgia.

ge'o-,] jī'o-; 2 gē'o-. From Greek gē, earth: a combining form.— ge"o-bi'o-lo'gic, a. Relating to the geobios or to geobiology.— ge"o-bi-ol'o-gy, n. The study of the geobios.— ge"o-bi'os, n. The complex of animal and plant life on land as contrasted with the life in the waters.— ge"o-blast, n. [Rare.] Bot. An embryo whose plumule rises from underground in germination, the cotyledons remaining buried.— ge"o-bot'a-ny, n. Phytogeography.— ge"o-bo-tan'ic-al, a.— ge"o-bot'a-nist, n.

Other words beginning with geo- may be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

ge'o-car"py,] jī'o-kär"pĭ; 2 gē'o-cär"py, n. Bot. The process of ripening fruit underground. See PEANUT. [< GEO- + Gr. karpos, fruit.]— ge"o-cen'tric, a.

ge"o-cen'tric,] jī"o-sen'trik; 2 gē"o-cĕn'tric, a. Relating to the earth as a center; measured from the earth or the earth's center.

The apparent position of a body as seen from the earth is called its geocentric place.

NEWCOMB AND HOLDEN Astronomy p. 86. [H. & CO. 1887.]

[< GEO- + CENTER.] ge"o-cen'tri-cal.— ge"o-cen'tri-cal-ly, adv.— ge"o-cen'tric, n. An advocate of geocentricism.— ge"o-cen'tri-cism, n. The ancient theory, whether physical or theological, that the earth is the central body of the planetary system, or the central object of divine providential care.

ge"o-cer'ite, n. Mineral. A white wax-like carbonaceous material found in brown coal.

ge"o-chem'i-cal, a. Showing the results of both geological and chemical action.— ge"o-chem'ist, n. Chemical geology, as distinguished from affinity, considered as that agent in producing present forms and conditions of materials in the earth's crust.— ge"o-chem'is-try, n. Chemistry as applied to geology; chemical geology.— ge"o-chem'ist, n.— ge'o-chrone, n. A time-unit for measuring geological periods.— ge"o-chron'ic, a. Of or pertaining to geological time.— ge"o-chro-nol'o-gy, n. The study of the time-measurement of the geological periods; geological chronology.— ge-och'ro-ny, n. Geol. The chronological classification of the earth's history.— ge"o-clch-lin(e), a. Of or pertaining to turdine birds (genus Geoclchla) or those with outside webs of secondaries white and axillaries partly-colored.— Ge"o-coc'cyx, n. A genus of cuculine terrestrial birds of the southwestern United States, represented by the roadrunner.— Ge″o-cor″i-sæ, n. pl. A division of heteropterous insects comprising those living on land. Ge″o-cor″ous, a. See -cris. — ge″o-cra″ic, a. Geol. Denoting the prevalence of earth over sea movements and conditions: opposed to hydrocratic.— ge-oc″ro-nite, n. Mineral. A metallic lustred leaden-gray lead arsenosulfantimate (Pb4SbAsS8), crystallizing in the orthorhombic system.— ge″o-cul″tur-al, a. Ethnol. Relating to culture as exhibited in regions characterized by cultural similarity.

The order of arrangement was geoculturel. Report U. S. National Museum, '09, p. 61. (oor. rro. orr. ″10.)

— ge″lo-ge″ic, a. Relating to or illustrating the revolution of the earth. 2. Revolving periodically around the earth.

geod, abbr. Geodesy.

ge″ode, 1 j-ōd; 2 gē″ōd, n. Geol. 1. A concretionary or nodular stone having a cavity lined with crystals. 2. The cavity itself together with its contents. 3. In mining, any cavity set around with crystals, in a vein. 4. Zool. A cavity in rock made, or adapted to its use, by a sea-urchin. [< L. geodes, certa n precious stones, < Gr. gēōdēs, earthy, < gē, earth, + eidos, form.]

Geode of Agate, lined with Quartz Crystals and containing Crystals of Sulfate of Lime (gypsum).

— ge″o-dal, a.— ge-od′ic, a.— ge″o-dif′er-ous, a. Producing or containing geodes.— ge″o-dist, n. A student of geodes.— ge″o-dize, vt. To change into a geode: chiefly in the past participle; as, a geodized fossil.

Ge″o-deph′a-ga, 1 j-ō-def′a-gə; 2 gē″ō-dēf′a-gə, n. pl. Entom. The Geadephaga.— ge″o-deph′a-gous, a.

ge″o-ded″ic, 1 j-ō-ded′ik; 2 gē″ō-dēd′ik, a. Same as GEODETIC. ge″o-des′tel-cat,. geodesic ellipse (Math.), a curve, on a surface, each of whose points is distant from two curves on the surface (its focal parabola) by lengths (measured geodesically) whose sum or difference is constant. g. hyperbola:— g. line (Math.), a curve, on a surface, each elementary part of which is the shortest line, on that surface, between its two ends: — g. parallels (Math.), geodesics that are perpendicular to the same arbitrary curve of a surface.— g. parallel system (Math.), a group of geodesic parallels that are perpendicular thereto. — g. polar system (Math.), a group of geodesics all passing through the same point, together with lines cutting them at right angles.

— g. surface (Math.), a pencil composed of geodesics.— g. torsion (of a curve) (Math.), torsion of the geodesic tangent to the curve at a point in a surface.— ge″o-des′le, n. A geodetic line.

ge-od′e-sy, 1 j-od′i-si; 2 gē-ōd′e-sy, n. The science and art of measuring portions of the earth's surface by triangulation and astronomical observations: the determination of the magnitude and figure of the earth: distinguished from surveying, which is concerned only with limited tracts, as farms or counties.

Eratosthenes, . . . the founder of geodesy, who first raised geography to science, considered the globe an immovable sphere. A. GUMAN American People p. 2. [o. s. co. 1883.]

ge″o-det′ic, 1 j-ō-det′ik; 2 gē″ō-dēt′ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or determined or effected by geodesy; as, a geodetic survey. ge″odetic level, a surface for the determination of differences of level of widely separated points by trigonometrical methods. g. line, the shortest line between two points on a surface of the earth, or of any geometric solid.— ge″o-det′ical-ly, adv. By means of or in accordance with geodesy.— ge″o-de-ti′cian, n. An expert in geodesy.— ge″o-det′ics, n. Same as GEODESY.

Ge″o-dil′e-ca, 1 j-ō-dil′i-kə; 2 gē″ō-dēl′e-kə, n. pl. Entom. A division of heteropterous insects, especially trochalopods with terminal claws, as in common buga.— ge″o-dil′e-can, a.

ge″o-duck, 1 j-ō-duk; 2 gē″ō-dŭk, n. [Am. Ind.] A large edible clam (Glycymeris veneroea) of the Pacific coast of North America.

ge″o-dy-nam′ic, a. Of or relating to the forces affecting the structure and modification of the earth; telluric. g″eo-dy-nam′ics, — ge″o-dy-nam′ics, n. Geodynamic science. — ge″o-eth′nic, a. Pertaining to the geographical relations of peoples and tribes.

Geof., abbr. Geoffrey.

Ge″o-fræ′a, 1 j-ē-frē′ə; 2 gē″ō-frē″a, n. Bot. A genus of tropical American trees of the family Fabaceæ, with odd-pinnate leaves, fetid yellow flowers, and edible seeds. G. superba yields a wood of the color of mahogany.

[< E. F. Geoffroy, French physician.] Ge″of-froy′a†.

Geof′frey, 1 jef′ri; 2 gēf′ry, n. A masculine personal name.

Geof′frey of Mon′mouth, surnamed Arthur (1110?–1154?). An English historian; Historia Britonum.

Geof″froi′, n. [F.] See GEOFFREY.

Geof″froy′-Saint′-Hi′laire′, 1 zē″frwȧ′-sănt′-i′lâr′; 2 zhō″frwȧ′-sănt′-i′lâr′, n. 1. Étienne (1/12772–1/11844), a French naturalist and philosopher; Essai Philosophy, etc. 2. Isidore (1/21805–1/21861), a French zoologist; son of preceding.

ge″o-form, 1 j-ē″o-fôrm, n. Same as CREOFORM.

geog., abbr. Geographer; geographical; geography.

Ge″o-gal′i-dæ, 1 j-ō-gal′i-di; 2 gē″ō-găl′i-dē, n. pl. Mam. A Madagascan family of contentoid insectivores having a mouse-like aspect, molars widening backward and with V-shaped cusps, and tibia and fibula distinct. Ge-og′a-le, n. (t. g.) — ge-og′a-lid, n., a.— ge″o-ga-loid, a. & n.

ge″og-e-ny, n. Rare.] The study of the genesis or formation of the earth. ge-og′o-nyt.— ge″o-gen′ic, ge″o-gon′ic, a. Of or pertaining to geogeny.— ge-og′e-nous, a. Growing in or directly nourished by the soil: said of some fungi.— Ge″o-glos′sum, n. Bot. A genus of ascomycetous fungi — the earthtongues — belonging to the family Geoglossaceæ. They project from the ground from 1 to 3 inches. There are 10 species, a few being common in meadows in the northern United States. See EARTH-TONGUE.— ge″o-glyph′ic, a. Geol. Denoting fossil markings in rocks, as indentations, burrowings, etc., regarded as records of past life and conditions.

ge′og-nost, 1 j′ōg-nost; 2 gē′ŏg-nŏst, n. [Rare.] One having knowledge of geognosy; a geologist.

ge-og′no-sy, 1 ji-og′no-sy; 2 ge-ŏg′no-sy, n. Knowledge of the materials of the earth; specif.: Geol. (1) The study of the successions, independently of their mutual stratigraphic relations. (2) An investigation of the materials of the earth's substances. (3) The study of the structure of the earth, or the arrangement of its materials; structural geology.

A discussion of the geological changes which our planet has undergone, such to be produced by a study of the materials of which the planet consists. This latter branch of inquiry is termed geognosy. ARCH. GIKIE Text-Book Geol. p. 30. [MACM. 1882.]

[< F. géognosie, < Gr. gē, earth, + gnōsis, knowledge, < gignōskō, know.] ge″og-no-sis′t.— ge″og-nos′tic, a. Of or pertaining to geognosy; geological. ge″og-nos′ti-cal†.— ge″o-g-nos′ti-cal-ly, adv.

KANE U. S. Grinnell Expedition p. 47. [D. 1854.]

ge″o-gram, 1 j′ō-o-gram; 2 gē″o-grăm, n. Geol. A diagrammatic representation of a continuous series of stratified rocks that may serve as a scale in estimating geologic time.

ge-og′ra-pher, 1 j-o-gr′a-fer; 2 ge-ŏg′ra-fer, n. One ge-og′ra-fer†, who is proficient in geography; a writer on geography.

ge″o-graph′i-cal, 1 j-ī″o-graf′i-kol; 2 gē″o-grăf′i-cal, a. ge″o-graf′i-cal†, Of or pertaining to geography; relating to topographical facts and influences. 2. Map-like; blotched in colors. ge″o-graph′ic†.

Italy was again, in the language of Prince Metternich, nothing more than a geographical expression. R. MACKENZIE Nineteenth Century [U. S.] p. 55. [N. 1883.]

— geographical variation, in biology, the variation from type in color, form, or habits in a species or variety of animal or plant due to local climatic and geographical influences.— g″eo-graph′ic-al-ly, adv.

ge-og′ra-phy, 1 ji-og′ra-fi; 2 ge-ŏg′ra-fy, n. [-PHIES, ge-og′ra-fys, -fiz; 2 -fīs, pl.] 1. The science that describes the surface of the earth, with its various peoples, animals, and natural products. See phrases below. 2. A book, especially a text-book, containing such a description. 3. The general aspect of a place, geographically considered. [< L. geographia, < Gr.

gēōgraphia, < gē, earth, + graphō, write.] — applied geography, commercial geography. — astronomical or cosmical g., the science that treats of the earth as a member of the solar system.— biological or organic g., biogeography.— botanic g., phytogeography.— commercial g., the science dealing with the relation of geographical facts to commerce; the location of commodities, local conditions, routes of trade, etc., with particular reference to the demands and possibilities.— mathematical g., the departments of geographical science that require the use of mathematics, including astronomical geography, geodesy, topography, and cartography.— physical g., the branch of g ography that treats of the physical features of the earth, more especially those of its surface, including the atmosphere, form and character of the surface under the operation of existing physical agencies, the distribution and flow of water, and the distribution of the forms of animal and plant life, and the relations among these.

ge″o-hy-drol′o-gy, 1 ji″o-hai-drol′o-ji; 2 gē″o-hy-drŏl′o-gy, n. The science dealing with subterranean waters.

ge″oid, 1 j-ī′oid; 2 gē″ōid, n. The earth considered as a geometrical solid whose surface coincides with the mean level of the ocean. [< Gr. geoidēs, < gē, earth; and see -OID.]

— g″eoi-dal, a. Of or pertaining to the geoid.

ge″o-i′so-therm, 1 ji″o-ai′so-thûrm; 2 gē″o-ī′so-thêrm, n. An geol., abbr. Geological; geologist; geology.

ge″o-log′ic-al, 1 ji″o-loj′i-kol; 2 gē″o-lŏj′i-cal, a. Of, pertaining to, or derived from geology. ge″o-log′ic†.

— ge″o-log′i-cal-ly, adv.

ge-ol′o-gist, 1 ji-ol′o-jist; 2 ge-ŏl′o-jist, n. One versed in geology, or engaged in geological study or investigation.

The world is the geologist's great puzzle-box. He stands before it like a child to whom the separate pieces remain a mystery till he detects their relation and sees where they fit, and then his fragments grow at once into a connected picture beneath his hands.

ge-ol′o-gize, 1 ji-ol′o-jaiz; 2 ge-ŏl′o-jīz, vi. [-GIZED; -GIZ-ING.] To make geological investigations, especially in the field; to study or discourse upon geology. ge-ol′o-gize†.

ge-ol′o-gy, 1 ji-ol′o-ji; 2 ge-ŏl′o-gy, n. [-GIES, 1 -jiz; 2 -gīs, pl.] 1. The department of natural science that treats of the present constitution and structure of the earth, and the operation of its physical forces, also of the history of the developments of this structure in the past, including the causes and modes of physical changes, and the occurrence and development of organisms. It embraces physical geography in part, but is not concerned with merely descriptive geographical details.

Geology embraces in general: (1) physiographic geology, including areal, geomorphic, and surface geology; (2) lithological geology, (3) historical geology, including formational and stratigraphic geology and paleontology; and (4) dynamical geology, including anthropic, biatic, diastrophic, glacic, hydric, and structural geology.

2. A treatise on the structure and history of the earth. [< GEO- + -LOGY.] — anthropic geology, the study of geological phenomena resulting from the presence or agency of man.— architectonic g., structural geology.— areal g., the study of the areal distribution of formations, rocks, and minerals.— astronomical g., that part of geology dealing with the earth as a planet. cosmical g.†.— biologic g., paleontology.— biotic g., the study of geological phenomena resulting from the presence or agency of plant and animal life.— diastrophic g., the study of the phenomena of deformation of the earth's crust.— dynamical g., the study of the agencies that have produced geological changes, their laws, and modes of action.— economic g., the study of the geological relations of the useful minerals, as ores, buildingstones, etc. applied g.†.— experimental g., the science of demonstrating geologic changes and results by developmental experiments.— formational g., same as STRATIGRAPHIC GEOLOGY.— geochronic g., same as HISTORICAL GEOLOGY.— geomorphic g., geomorphogeny.— geotectonic g., structural geology. geotectonic g.†.— glacial g., the study of phenomena of glacial action and deposits.— historical g., the study of the chronological succession in the development both of rock-formations and of organisms, and of contemporaneous events and phenomena during these stages of progress. It embraces both what is usually (as restricted) and paleontological geology. Sometimes called stratigraphic geology.— hydric g., the study of the phenomena of crystal deformation, sculpture, and degradation, and of deposition, by aqueous agencies.— lithological, petrographical, or petrological g., the study of rocks and their constituent materials, their genesis, condition, and alterations; sometimes made to include structural geology.— paleontologic g., that branch of geology treating of the nature, development, and distribution of organic life during such geological epochs as fossils afford data for; the facts, causes, and laws of the earth's physical history: nearly equivalent to historical and dynamical geology divested of paleontology.— physiographic g., the study of the origin and development of the features of the earth's surface, and of the processes which are at present modifying them; physiography.— stratigraphic g., or stratigraphy, the study of the chronological order of succession in rocks masses, and their present order of superposition and mutual relations: sometimes made to include paleontological geology, as equivalent to historical geology.— surface g., the study of the origin and development of the structures revealed in the rocks of the earth's crust. See MONOLOGY.— surficial g., the study of the more superficial phenomena of the earth's crust, as of the glacial drift and of alluvial deposits. surficial g.†.

The accompanying Table of Geological History is provisional, but represents approximately the general consensus of geologists at present, including the latest well-established views. For the United States it is based largely, but not wholly, on the usage of the U. S. Geological Survey. For Europe it has been prepared from a comparison of the leading works in English, French, and German. No table of strata can be constructed in a limited space that will completely fit even one continent. Each geologic province has its own stratigraphic subdivisions, and the correlation from one province to another is often difficult, and is at present by no means completely worked out. The names of the larger subdivisions, down to epoch and series, are used both for the stratigraphic divisions and for the corresponding intervals of geologic time; the same is true to some extent of the names of minor subdivisions.

The amount of space given to each subdivision of the Table is based on the number of formation-names used, and is not intended to show the relative thickness of the strata or the relative length of time represented. Formations on the same line are at approximately the same horizon, but in many cases only approximately so, and in many others the correlation is yet uncertain, especially that of formation with European formations. Formations in the same column were, as a rule, deposited in the same general region in the order here shown, but are seldom found in full sequence at any one locality, and in a few cases formations of rather widely separated areas are given in the same column. A name in parentheses following a brace indicates that the formation is the equivalent, in another area, of those bracketed. Names of formations separated by a comma, or by the word and, indicate formations in general distinct, but, as a rule, the in some cases not strictly equivalent. In the column of European formations names separated by a semicolon indicate formations approximately equivalent but occurring in different regions.

The following explanations refer to the superior figures occurring in the column of formations: 1 The correlation of these deposits with the various glacial stages is yet almost wholly conjectural. 2 The formations under this heading were deposited largely in separated basins and are by all found in sequence anywhere. They overlap one another to some extent in time of deposition, but their general order of age is as given. 3 The formations in the column in the Cambrian, Ordovician, and Silurian systems are British. 4 Geologists are not yet agreed regarding the systems to which these formations should be assigned, some authorities placing them in the underlying or overlying system as the case may be. 5 The horizon of these formations is only approximately known. The Terrace and Sierran stages were times of elevation and erosion, and no deposits formed as those times are as yet definitely recognized. The Sierran elevation, however, may have begun in the Pliocene and probably continued throughout a considerable part of the Pleistocene epoch.
